THE SPIRITS IN THE WOODS.

Spiritualists Picnicking on Pleasant.

The Spiritualists held their annual picnic yesterday. Some five or six hundred people, either spiritualists themselves, or with a spiritualistic friend as a nucleus for such little company, took the steamer Island City at sundry hours of the day, and the railroad which pushes some eight miles from Hunter's Point, eastward, and arrived at Flushing, L. I., where in a grove that covers an insulated hill, surrounded entirely by salt meadows, or by salt water, the picnic was held. It is a beautiful spot for spending a day among the trees. The forest oak, elm, maple and hickory, are thick enough to afford a deep shade and the landscape on all sides is grateful. About noon, after the exercises of the morning meeting had been settled, six score of different tables, several circles were formed, but nothing astonishing came of them. One woman told how she had lost seven children, but had only lost them to the outer manse. With the inner eye, when it desired to use that telescope which we call the eye, said she, her lost ones were clearly visible about her, day and night. She could not really say that she mourned them—their spirits were now a higher plane than they could be if still associated with the flesh. Another told how she never went out, but that the spirit of true connection took an arm and escorted her wherever she went. They talked to her with voices that were entirely audible, though other people professed that they could not hear them, and she talked with them with more comfort than could be imagined by those who only talk with fleshy beings. A man said that he became a widower about a year ago—the spirit of a woman whom he loved in his youth had come rushing and commanded him to marry her sister. He had obeyed the command, and wanted to testify that they who obey shall eat the fat of the land. But, down to 6 o'clock there was nothing very absurd—the stories told were very much of the kind that servant girls are discharged for having told to the children when the old folks are out at night, only that what servant girls call "witches," and "spooks" and "ghosts," these narrators called "spirits." At 6 o'clock, Sirrs, the Razor-strop man, came rushing into the thickest, crying with a loud voice, "Ho! ho! ho! every one that has got a baby, a wife, a dinner-basket, an ear to hear, let him come here together,—scoop up, crawl up, rush up, hello! friends all, just come together for only half a minute. 'Tis a highly important business. Those that don't come will lose their passage home. If you want your tickets to be of any use to you, gather yo together, every one of you, for just a minute and a half."

Otherwise, everybody rushed up, and then Sirrs said the crowd that he was going to take up a col ection to pay the band, who were giving them some very handsome fiddling in the hall at the top of the hill. Meanwhile, in the hall there were about 100 spiritualists having a great dance. They kept it up, with very little intermission, throughout the afternoon, though the sets were changed perpetually, and when any one party got completely tired out it retired into some of the circles and got under the influence as early as possible.

When sufficient funds were raised, Razor-strop Sirrs shouted at the top of his voice, "the door is shut! we want no more of your money, and those of you who have neglected to be generous must chew the end of bitter sorrow, and make the best of it. Now, then, all hands, let's form a circle—let's be a circle. You that will join it sit down on this bench,"—for the benches had been so placed as to form a circle, some 40 feet in diameter. "You young ones, get out of the circle, but the young ones can sit on the benches if they want to, but no one must be inside of the circle. We'll have some manifestations in a hurry, now. Now, then," said he, "let's fall to."

It was a curious scene that the circle presented. The company was gathered on a side hill—the line of benches that formed the circle was occupied by men smoking, women wondering, and curious little children. Nothing was said about "conditions." The presence of skeptics did not interfere at all. There was no taking hold of hands. At the lowest point of the circle there was a table, and an invitation manifestly to the effect that if there was any reporter present he should go down to it, but nobody went down to it. A very dark man, with very short crisp hair, who was announced as a Mr. Rasmore, and who was said to have been educated exclusively by the spirits, leaped upon the table, and made a vehement and solemn speech. A Mr. Stewart followed—a curious little man with light curly hair, who kept rubbing his forehead and his beard as if he had been a deaf mute, and were feeling out the spirit communication through his fingers. He suggested, among other things, that while they were on the ground no one should broach the subject of politics, or mention the names of Buchanan, Fillmore or Fremont. This proposition was assented to with signs of applause. Professor Fowler, of the Poughkeepsie Law school—a stout man with bushy black whiskers, cut in the large mutton-chop style—made a speech, scaling by his voice many speeches that he made in the old times—in 1840—during the Harrison campaign.

Mr. Fowler took high spiritual ground, and went to the furthest extreme in the experience he narrated. Doctor Fellows, a healing medium, spoke perhaps a dozen times, but, apparently, not with extraordinary edification. Once when talking of the "dark and dreary days" when he was "unacquainted with the sublime manifestations of Spiritualism," he spoke of "the man who married him." Razor-strop Sirrs, who was lying at full length in about the center of the circle, sprang up on all fours, and emitted a sort of horse-laugh; then rearing himself at full length, he confronted the speaker with the question—"A man marry you—bless me! who'd have thought it? A man married you?" "Yes, Sir," said the speaker. "I can easily believe it," said Sirrs, relapsing into full length upon the ground, and roaring as if some merry spirit had got entire possession of him at last. The women in the circle laughed as if they would have died, and cracked many jokes at the expense of the speaker's manhood. But he went right on. Two ladies had slipped inside of the circle and backed up against a tree, and were evidently well under the influence. When the speaker alluded to something in the Bible, one of these fair ones, whose eyes were "in a fine frenzy rolling," said something to him that we did not catch. "No," responded Dr. Fellows, the healing medium, with great energy, "I will not repudiate any truths found in the Bible—I will not say one word against the ministers who keep upon those truths." "Ha! ha! ha!" roared Razor-strop Sirrs, leaping to his feet—"That is the prettiest joke of all—o-ee-o-no, don't say nothing agin the priests; I was one of them once myself, and the Spiritualists cut me out of my salary—don't say nothing agin the Bible"—and dropping his arms straight from his shoulder-blades and drawing his head well in between his shoulders, he capered around, on the turf, as if he were possessed of ten low-comedy spirits all at once.

"Now, then, come on," said he. "I was under the influence then, but now I'm speaking for myself. I am speak, plain Sirrs, the Razor-strop Man. We have preached and talked all day, and nobody says a word against us; but, outside of the circle, how do one of the whole company think we are treats. Now, come on—I want to hear something on t'other side. If there's a clergyman here, I wish he'd come in and tell us what fools we are, and prove that we ought to go into straight jackets, and then I'll stand up and prove that he's the fool, and that he ought to go into straight jackets, if he don't knock under to just our doctrine. Nobody comes forward! Well, then, if some foolish spirit will give me a rap, I'll pitch into Spiritualists myself! Hi! you's all a pack of fools, crack-brained men, and hysterical women! To pay nights when there's nothing to be seen, and think ye hear the voices of spirits, when it's nothing but a ringing in your ears. Turn to your Bibles, and see ——. There, my foolish orthodox spirit's gone, and that's all I can get out of him;" and finish, with a caper or two, dropped down, full length, on the grass.

A healing medium, whose name we could not learn, took the turf. "Brother Sirrs has made a very poor speech," he said; "while impersonating an unbeliever, but it was as good as any unbeliever could make: it was just about the substance of what one would be sure to say: investigate," said he "investigate—"

But at this point a curious scene was enacting just outside the circle, which we rushed up to "investigate," as advised. A woman with an immense Bloomer hat on her head stood clenching a letter in her hand and shaking all over, as if she had been spending a fortnight in a fever and ague district, and had a bad chill on; her eyes were partly closed at times, then rolled and closed again; she tore at her bosom, wrung her hands, watched as her hair, grew scarlet in her face, trembled violently, then seemed about to fall back exhausted. The spectators supported her, and then, regaining strength, the terrible spirit that was contending her, through her inexperienced mediumship, found broken utterance: "Do it—do it—do it—now or never." "But what is it I am to do?" asked Rev. Mr. Fessenden, to whom her remarks were evidently addressed. It came out, after much bodily convulsion, and by much guessing at the meaning of the broken sentences which the medium used—that the reverend gentleman was to write the article, or deliver the lecture, which a correspondent had urged him to perform in the letter she held in her hand.

"Then you would have me deliver the lecture, or write the article spoken of, would you?" asked Mr. Fessenden.

"Do it, do it, do it—o—o—o—everything—never—gone," said the medium, at the same time going again through the most terrible convulsions, plucking at her dress, wringing her hands, heaving at her bosom, and at last dashing the letter upon the ground and stamping upon it furiously. After this the medium seemed to feel better, and expressed great gratification that her old mediumship was returning to her. Down to a year ago she had been very frequently employed by spirits to convey messages, but lately she had lacked faith—had thought it might be all of her own power that the manifestations had been made, and she had grieved over it. It certainly was a very curious case, and one which the old medical writers universally treated with a five-grain pill of assafœtida, to be taken nightly so long as the attack recurred. In the large circle the buffoonery of Sirrs and the preaching of the rest still continued. Rather a handsome woman in a blue plaid silk had seated herself on the ground within the circle, and did a little frothing at the mouth, rolling of the eyes, and so forth. The crowd had great expectations of her, but the conditions were not right, and nothing came of it.

Altogether, it was the most absurd occasion we ever witnessed. The speakers, with great uniformity, tore the King's English to tatters, and spoke with great freedom from all grammatical rules. One minute the hearer might fancy himself at church, the next in a ballroom, the next at a Tom Paine festival, the next in a dreary kitchen, lighted only by a tallow candle, whose wick was a winding sheet, the congregation a group of shuddering children, the speaker a toothless crone who would have been drowned in the duck pond for witchcraft in Cotton Mather's day. There were no "tippings," "rappings," or spiritual writings, yet a venerable old lady, as she gathered up her teapot and silver spoons into a basket, spoke the universal sentiment when she said, "What a lovely, lovely, lovely time we've had—the speaking was beautiful, the singing was very nice, and dancing delightful, and bread and butter never tasted so good before."

We trust the time was not wholly without profit. It certainly could not have been so to the healing mediums. "Hold up your hands," said one of them to a lady afflicted with bad neuralgia—"hold them so; now clasp them over your head." Then making a single pass before her face, he chucked her under the chin, saying, "There, you are better, ma'am; you'll never feel the pain again." To a woman who had the vapors he came with more tedious fussings. He tapped her on one breast, then on the other, thumped her head, felt her wrist, and pinched her flesh. "I see a very bright light over here that I can't account for," said he; "there's so many here to-day, you'll have to come to my office. I can see it all when we're alone." But what his fee is we could not learn. But if the rest of us made no money out of it, all had a fine day in the woods, and a fine ride and sail home again. Those who do not remember it with exceeding great delight, will always agree that until they see just such another, the civilized gathering that ever witnessed was the Spiritualist's Pic-nic for 1856.

The Revoked Charter of the American State Council of Connecticut—Reply of Hon. N. D. Sperry.

NEW HAVEN, Monday, July 21st, 1856.

To Messrs. Henry Sherman and Oliver Ellsworth, Hartford, Conn.

GENTLEMEN: Your note requesting me to send to your address, the Charter of the State Council, belonging to the American Party of Connecticut, now in my possession, came duly to hand.

Permit me, in reply to your request, to say, that the Charter I have in my possession is the property of the State Council of Connecticut. It is in my hands for safe keeping, and I shall endeavor to be true to the trust reposed in me by its members. The notice I received from you, purporting to come from Mr. Barbieri, you say is a correct copy of the original. This may be so; yet I would have preferred the original direct from him, and not by the way of other persons, having the appearance of being interested in the matter. The demand for the surrender of the Charter, I do not recognize. Mr. Barbieri has no power according to the constitution to revoke or demand a surrender of the Charter. The action should be had by the organization itself, and without that action he has no power in the matter. In order to add dignity to the document demanding our Charter, Mr. Barbieri takes to himself the honor of being at the head of the National Organization, when he himself is the very head and front of sectionalism, maintaining the mistaken idea, that Slavery is National, and Freedom sectional. Has he not as yet learned the first principles of our free Constitution? Does he not know that a party to be sectional must acknowledge the great principle that Freedom is national, not sectional? The American Party of the Free States is truly national. It acknowledges that freedom and liberty mean the same now as in the days of the Revolution, and those landmarks we wish to preserve. We cannot be driven from our position, by any coercive action or threats of sectional men. We cannot be driven or whipped into the support of Fillmore and Donelson, by any such acts as this of Mr. Barbieri and his colaborers. Mr. Barbieri may go through the form of revoking our Charter, and you may give it all the publicity you think best in the Express, as it appeared to-day; publish it in all of the New-York papers, if you please, that you will attend to the reorganization of the Councils throughout the State. Do what you will, we shall remain the same. You must convince us that we are wrong by argument, not by attempting to drive us in any such manner as this. We cannot, and will not be driven. IT IS NOT AMERICAN TO RUN AT THE FIRST SHOW OF THE ENEMY. We will, like our fathers, maintain our ground, standing shoulder to shoulder in defence of Liberty. We cannot submit to sectional dictation, when justice, principle, and the sacred rights of humanity are to be trampled under foot; nor can we consent to compromise principle.

And now, gentlemen, one word to you. What has caused such a revolution in your sentiments? On several occasions you have supported your delegates in Convention, when they have met the South, upon the subject of Slavery, and you, Mr. Sherman, said that the only fault you found was, that the delegates did not go far enough upon this question. You submitted resolutions to be adopted as a part of our political creed, of this import: "That Slavery existing out of the limits of the original thirteen States, existed contrary to the Constitution" and your speech was long and able upon this point. Again, you stated that upon this subject you stood upon the ordinance of 1787. Now where do we find you, but standing upon a Pro-Slavery platform, supporting a ticket nominated by Pro-Slavery men. I ask again, what has produced such a change in your political faith that you cannot support John C. Fremont and William F. Johnston, who are the nominees of the National American Party, who are good and true men, and I know will support and maintain the principles of the Convention that nominated them? It is for this reason that I, once a American, voted for them in Convention, from first to last, and shall vote for them, if my life is spared, in November next; and I have no doubt all true Americans will rally to their support and elect them triumphantly, President and Vice President of the United States.

And now, gentlemen, I hope you will so act in the coming canvass that you will prove yourselves worthy of the names you severally bear. Sherman and Ellsworth are honored names in Connecticut. Their lives and characters are worthy of our study; may we perpetuate their principles and emulate their example, for our country's sake, in this hour of her peril and adversity.

I am, gentlemen, your friend, and have the honor to subscribe myself your obedient servant,

N. D. SPERRY,

President of the American State Council of Connecticut.

P. S.—Inasmuch as you have made public the correspondence of Mr. Barbieri, I deem it equally proper to reply in the same way.

INTERESTING FROM WASHINGTON.

The Difficulty between Messrs. Burlingame and Brooks.

Preliminary Notes—Departure of Burlingame for Canada—Brooks concludes not to follow him, and is Arrested.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, July 22.

The most intense excitement has existed here all day relative to the Burlingame and Brooks affair of honor. A thousand exciting rumors—some of which were accepted and reiterated as authenticated facts—have been circulated here and transmitted by telegraph in every direction.

The truth is, nobody among Mr. Burlingame's friends, except his confidential advisers, knew one word of his movements. Even Senator Hale, his room-mate and companion, is totally unadvised, and not a syllable of the affair has been breathed on Burlingame's side. A secret was never better kept.

To-night I only know that no hostile meeting has taken place, and that Burlingame is entirely free from bodily harm. This his friends may rely upon, in answer to a rumor that he had been wounded.

From various well-considered indications, I am satisfied that Brooks yesterday addressed Burlingame, inquiring where, outside the District of Columbia, he would receive a message from him; that this note was probably sent by the hands of General Lane, of Oregon; that Burlingame, who as the party to be challenged had a right to name the place of meeting, named Clifton House, Canada side, Niagara Falls, where no outside interference would be probable; that, taking with him General Charles Jarvis, of Wisconsin, as his friend, he left the District last night in order to avoid arrest, and took the cars between here and Baltimore this morning on his way to the Falls; and that Brooks declined going to Canada, on the ground that it was not safe for him to do so, and has been arrested here to-day and bound in five thousand dollars to keep the peace.

I also have no doubt that his confidential advisers yesterday as to his movements, were Senator Sam. Houston, of Texas, and a distinguished member of the House whom it is unnecessary to name.

Burlingame will probably proceed to the Falls, unconscious that Brooks is not following, where he will wait a reasonable time for Brooks and then return.

In answer to the statement of a New-York paper, that Burlingame's friends alone goaded him to withdraw his original memorandum, I reply that his enemies distorted and misrepresented it also.

The statement that Cullom discharged Acton, a clerk of the House, for attending a Fremont meeting, is erroneous. The misunderstanding has been explained, and Acton restored. S.

LATER.

I have now ample confirmation of the main facts stated in my previous dispatch. Burlingame addressed Brooks a note last night, acknowledging the receipt of his message asking where he would receive a communication from him, informing him that he would meet him on Saturday noon at the Clifton House, Niagara Falls, where any differences pending between them could be settled. Burlingame then immediately started.

Brooks, on receiving the note, said he would pursue the subject no further.

It is understood that Brooks' friends will publish the correspondence to-morrow. S.

LATEST.

Brooks declines furnishing us a copy of the correspondence for publication. Together with Brooks' card in explanation, it makes two columns in the Union.

The effort will probably now be made to put Burlingame in a false position, by allegations or language designed to draw a challenge from him. His opponents doubtless know this to be safe, as Burlingame is not understood to claim to be a duelist, and while he will accept a challenge under existing circumstances, he cannot probably be dragooned into sending one. In other words, if I understand his position, he would only accept a challenge as an act of self defence, and as an alternative of assassination. S.

The Brooks and Burlingame Affair—The Herbert Case—Confirmations, &c.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, July 22.

Francis C. Treadwell, of New-York, yesterday made affidavit that, from publications in the newspapers during the past and present week, and from conversation with various individuals, he had reason to believe that a challenge to fight a duel had passed between Messrs. Brooks and Burlingame, and that they were making preparations to fight, in violation of the peace of the District of Columbia and the act of Congress in relation to duelling. He prayed that the parties might be arrested and put under bonds. In pursuance of this Mr. Brooks was arrested at 10 o'clock this morning and taken before Justice Hollingshead, accompanied by his friend, Mr. Bell, of Texas, and gave security in the sum of $5,000.

The police officers are in search of Mr. Burlingame, who left the district last night or early this morning, as it is supposed, to receive the challenge. Up to noon, to-day, his immediate friends could not tell whether or no there had been a meeting, though there is a rumor in circulation that there has been one. Great excitement exists among Congressmen.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, July 22—P. M.

Among the many reports in circulation, the most reliable is that Mr. Brooks asked Mr. Burlingame, through a friend, where a note or challenge would reach him, and Mr. Burlingame replied, "the Clifton House, Canada." Mr. Brooks, it is further stated, declines following, preferring a meeting in this vicinity. Mr. Burlingame's friends express their language of his withdrawal.

The testimony in the Hindman trial has closed. The counsel for the defence proposed to submit the case to the Jury without argument, but the prosecution objected.

The Senate has confirmed the appointment of Benjamin G. Brown as Consul to Vienna.

The Vanderbilt steamer, from New-York, has arrived here, and will undergo the inspection of officers of Government and Congressmen.

The Three Million Appropriation Bill in the Senate—The Final Adjournment—Something for the Crankers.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, July 21, 1856.

THE SENATE AND THE THREE MILLION BILL.

Congress was rather dull to-day. In the Senate a Committee of five Chairmen of principal Committees arrange the business of each day—deciding what shall and what shall not be considered. This arrangement is the result of a peace agreement by the majority, and is strictly adhered to. The business specially set apart for to-day was the bill to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, by appropriating $3,000,000 chiefly for the extension of small arms, and for the accumulation of munitions of war on the Pacific coast.

This bill was not recommended in the annual report of the Secretary of War, but was hatched some months since, when the war fever was high, and an armed collision with England seemed to be impending, to the amazed many persons. That occasion has expired. The war cloud has passed away, and with it the pretext upon which the bill was introduced. The Administration men saw that no $3,000,000 could now be carried for the purposes named, so they reduced the amount to $1,000,000, and, in that shape, carried it. I don't believe they can get it through the other House. There is undoubtedly a necessity for the accumulation of material of war on the Pacific coast, with view to preparation for any sudden emergency; but it is very questionable whether the measure ought to become a law unless it is restricted to that single point.

THE END OF ADJOURNMENT.

There seems to be a certainty of an adjournment of Congress at last, as the House is quite sure to collour to-morrow in the new resolution of the Senate terminating the session on the 14th August. Some of our best friends are honestly opposed to fixing any day for adjournment at present, believing that it is important to continue the session until various measures of practical legislation are disposed of. But all experience teaches that, in the present condition of Congress, just as much will be done in the coming three weeks as would be if the adjournment were postponed a month later. Besides, it is perfectly evident to the minds of many that the Administration men and Fillmore Americans are concocting some scheme to pass the Senate's bill to make Kansas a Slave-State. I am free to confess that I believe they will succeed in this scheme if they can even get the bill up for consideration during the present session. It is answered to these fears, that the opponents of the bill are strong enough to defeat it unless it shall be properly amended. I am by no means so confident. We were told the same thing in regard to the Nebraska bill when it was pending. How badly we were cheated and beaten then is matter of history.

HOW TO MAKE KANSAS A SLAVE STATE.

If the Senate's last Kansas iniquity is taken up in the House, it will probably be amended by incorporating into it a provision for the restoration of the Missouri Compromise. This and other amendments, distasteful to the Senate majority, may be made; but even that is not sure, for the matter will be in the hands of Hayne, Dunn, and other doubtful Northern men—and Hayne's speech of to-day clearly shows that he, for one, cannot be relied upon to vote for the restoration of the Missouri restriction. But admitting that the House does thus amend the bill, the Senate will at once reject the amendments. The bill being returned to the House, the question will be, "Shall the House recede?" And upon that question, in all human probability, Hayne, Dunn, et al omne genus, will unite with the professed Pro-Slavery men, carry the motion to recede upon the plea of the necessity of "doing something to quiet Kansas," and so pass the bill in the precise shape demanded by Douglas & Co. Now that strikes me to be an evil which our friends should avert at almost any cost, for to attempt to give peace to Kansas by passing the Senate's bill, would be even worse than to quiet a sick man by taking his life with arsenic. The only way in which to avoid the trap which the Pro-Slavery men are setting, is to fix a day for adjournment, so that we may have in our hands the parliamentary weapons with which to defeat any trick of the character I have described. Be assured there never was more danger to the cause of free Kansas than is impending now in this capital, and it behoves every patriot to "watch and pray" without ceasing.

THE CRANKERS RESUMED.

A good story is told at the expense of those who protest that Fremont's election will lead to dissolution. A few evenings since, a company of gentlemen were assembled in this city at a quiet game of whist. Among the party was a distinguished New-York politician, and several Southern members of Congress. The conversation turned upon the Presidential Election, and all the horrid train of evils to follow upon Fremont's selection were set forth in glowing colors. It was asserted that his must necessarily be a sectional administration, under which no Southern men could or would take office,—the consequence of which calamity it was voted must uproot the pillars of the Republic. One of the Southern M. C.'s, after listening for some time to these grave arguments instead of assenting to their force, suggested that he desired no larger fortune than he would undertake to collect in the way of toll across the Long Bridge over the Potomac from the applicants for office under Fremont's Administration from the State of Virginia alone! This unexpected fire in the rear rather astonished the croakers, and doubtless set them thinking. S.

XXXIVth CONGRESS—First Session.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Tuesday, July 22.

IRON FOR GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS.

On motion of Mr. Seward, a resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Manufactures to inquire concerning the extent to which iron may be substituted for wood, stone, and brick, in public buildings of the United States.

PAY OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. Bayles introduced a bill to regulate the compensation of members of Congress.

The bill proposes to give a salary of $3,000 for each regular session, instead of the present per diem, and for extra sessions the present per diem and 20 cents a mile for travel each way.

THE FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The Senate concurred in the action of the House to adjourn on the 14th of August.

HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

The bill continuing the improvement of the harbor of Racine, Wis., was passed by 24 against 12.

A long debate on the constitutionality and expediency of appropriations for such purposes, ensued on the bill continuing the harbor of Kenosha, Wis., which passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, July 22.

THE ADJOURNMENT.

The House passed the Senate's resolution, with the amendment fixing the close of the session on the 12th of August, by yeas, 123; nays 51.

Mr. Chapman, sitting delegate, and Mr. Bennett contestant, participated in the debate.

The resolution of the Committee on Elections, declaring Mr. Chapman not elected, was rejected by 63 against 69. Adjourned.

☞ We are requested to state that a meeting of the Southfield Fremont and Dayton Club will be held this evening, at the Tompkins Lyceum, Stapleton, Staten Island, at 7½ o'clock. A boat will return to this City at 10 o'clock P. M., affording a fine opportunity for glee clubs and others to make a pleasant excursion.

☞ A "Fremont and Dayton" Club has been formed in Wilmington, Delaware. It has a President, two Vice-Presidents, two Secretaries, a Treasurer, and seven Directors. The following are articles of its Constitution:

Art. IV. This Club may, at any time, as a mark of respect, elect to the office of Hon. Vice-President, or honorary membership, any distinguished or influential gentleman, whether a resident or non-resident, provided he be known to be favorable to the Constitution of the United States and the election of John C. Fremont.

Art. V. The officers of this Club are continued until the election of John C. Fremont.

Diabolic Attempt at Poisoning.—Two negroes were arrested in Richmond, on Saturday last, on the charge of attempting to poison Mr. Benjamin Grant, their overseer. Two weeks ago, Mr. Grant, after eating his breakfast, was taken with a severe spell of vomiting which continued, at intervals, during the day. On Saturday morning, as was usual, he sent negro Sam for his breakfast. Sam returned, and when Mr. G. took a cup of his coffee he perceived it had a peculiar taste. He poured the contents from the cup, and noticed a white substance in the bottom. He had it analyzed, and found it to be arsenic. Negro Sam says that another servant, named Wm. Jackson, had given him a four-pence if he would allow him to put a paper of white substance in the coffee when he was taking it to Mr. Grant.—Baltimore American, July 21.

Free Academy—Fourth Annual Commencement.

Contrary to precedent, on evening Commencement took place yesterday. The Fourth Commencement of the Free Academy was celebrated at the Academy of Music. Five thousand people packed the building. The stage was occupied by a hundred gentlemen, some of them City notabilities. The music, under direction of Dodworth, was exquisite. The performances began soon after 6, and ended at 11 o'clock, but the audience sat the Lotus through without symptoms of weariness. Nine of the Graduating Class appeared as claimants for the popular applause; one was excused; and the whole Class numbered 16. The speeches were as follows:

Salutatory Address—Orsino—Addison's Ministion.....Arthur McMullin.
Dissertation—Alexander at Jerusalem.....John Edward Ward.
Oration—Instability of Principle.....Everett P. Wheeler.
Oration—The Heroic Ages of the North.....Ignatius Van Buren.
Dissertation—Wyoming.....John Howe, Jr.
Philosophical Oration—Spiritual Literature.....Franklin S. Rising.
Dissertation—National Destiny.....Henry Davis, Jr.
Oration—The "One Idea" of Life.....Russell Sturgis, Jr.
Master's Oration—The Overshadowed Manor.....John Hardy, A. B.

Mr. Francis McMullen was announced for a dissertation on "Medieval Credulity," but was excused from appearing. The speeches were received in Commencement sessions; three young gentlemen did their best, and the harvest of bouquets was reaped in the orthodox style, but the palm was evidently carried away by Mr. Franklin S. Rising, a graduate of three-and-twenty, whose manner and matter were alike above the average, and earned him well-merited plaudits. This gentleman was awarded three prize medals, for proficiency in study. His free manner, and the originality of ideas in his philosophical oration, would be excellent models for his fellows.

The valedictories were delivered by Charles H. Pratt. They were creditable. The Master's Oration was the first delivered at a Free Academy Commencement.

The graduating class is as follows:

Warning to Young Men.

A lady residing in Clinton-avenue, Brooklyn, had given her qualified consent to marry a very respectable young lawyer who abides by day in Nassau-street. One evening last week, as the happy couple walked in the horse chestnut grove near her house, he unfortunately touched upon politics, and expressed his favorable opinion of Mr. Buchanan. "What," said she, "do you countenance and work for the election of one who has set so bad an example to the young men?" "Yes, pet," he answered, meekly. "Go, then, Sir, and follow the example of your leader. Practice what you preach, Sir; be for life a bachelor—I'll not be your bride," said the indignant damsel, as, with his bright dream of half a million dowry, she vanished into the house. The gossips have got hold of it, and half the S. B. Clubs in town are speaking with the appearance of a sudden and utter disorganization from the desertion of members.

Latest from the Plains—The Sioux and Foxes at War with the Comanches.

From the St. Louis Democrat, July 16.

We have very late and reliable intelligence from the Plains, advising us that a somewhat sanguinary conflict has taken place between the confederate Sioux and Foxes and the Comanches, resulting in the routing of the latter with considerable loss. Nothing is known of the relative force of either party, but the success of the Sioux and Foxes is imputed to the superiority of their arms. The conflict took place at the crossings of the Kiskatoon on the Santa Fé road, and continued during some hours. The Sioux and Foxes killed twenty-one Comanches and took two prisoners. They lost two of their party and had several wounded. It is a rather curious coincidence that just about this time two years ago, immediately before the arrival of General Wharton in the Indian country, a hostile meeting should have occurred at the same place, between the same parties, and with precisely the same result.

Infamous Outrage.—The Engineer of the mail train that left New-York at 6 o'clock on Saturday evening, when between Kingston and New-Brunswick, discovered on the track, about 400 yards in advance, a sleeper and a piece of iron rail, apparently placed there for the purpose of throwing the cars of the track. He was fortunately able to slacken the speed of the train so that the contemptive throw the obstruction off the track.—Philadelphia Transcript, July 22.

The Sixty-Second Pennsylvania Intelligencer.

The investigation of the causes of the late railroad accident near Philadelphia still continues before the Coroners. The following is the testimony of the conductor of the mountain train:

Alfred N. Hunter, conductor of the mountain train on the evening of the 16th ult., says: I left Harrisburg with the train nine or ten minutes after five o'clock, P. M., on that day; we came up on the Pennsylvania railroad; we stopped at Mount Holly; we stopped at Lewis's; we stopped at Edge Hill; we stopped some five or six minutes; I put on the brake at this place, and when leaving it told the engineer we would make the Edge Hill station, and then I would see whether we had sufficient time to make Fort Washington; I had no knowledge at the train, cannot find Cornell; I sent a man back to tell him (Cornell) that he should leave the baggage at their own property, and to prevent passengers from stepping on the track and cars. I told Fleury to tell Cornell that my time was sufficient, and that I intended to make Fort Washington if we should arrive at Edge Hill station eight minutes after eight by my watch; this was at Edge Hill station; it was eight minutes after six o'clock; I then came on the platform of the first passenger car right next to the water tank; when the engine stopped I was standing on the step of the car; and as they moved some other I jumped, and that is all I know, until some time after. I found myself touching a lady's dress in two places, and met a place down some steps along the road to warn approaching trains; it was pitch dark; I had a conversation with Mr. Cornell at the time of stopping, in which I suggested to him that if we kept on this way we should have to take the siding at Edge Hill; it was not my determination at the time to stop at Edge Hill; but if I had time on arriving at that station, without endangering my passengers, to run on to Fort Washington; the regular time for the down train to leave Fort Washington was 6 o'clock; it is a rule in relation of the road that down trains must wait an expected train fifteen minutes, applying as well to special trains as to regular ones; I supposed the conductor of the down train had some reason for keeping the coming up of the excursion train for different reasons, and especially as he had charge of my regular train; when I started from Edge Hill station I calculated I had twenty-two minutes to run to Fort Washington; I had a copy of the instructions before I left the city, but I do not know where they are now; I left the city at about nine minutes after five o'clock A. M.; the train master directed me, and said that if I had the fifteen minutes to spare, my time to arrive at Fort Washington was six o'clock A. M.; the time for the regular train to leave a station when expecting an opposing train is fifteen minutes after timetable time; my understanding of the instructions is, that the time for the down train to have left Fort Washington was 6.30 in consequence of our non-arrival; the Fort Washington train was delayed at our station on the road; he was not conductor; he acted before in that capacity; I don't know that he had any instructions for the day of collision other than the printed instructions and regulations; I have always exercised care in the morning trains since I have been on the road; have always been cautious, and would not in this instance have run on, if I had not believed that the time of the down train to leave Fort Washington, under the circumstances, was 6.30.

THE ORDINANCE OF 1787.

The Authorship of the Ordinance of 1787.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, July 19, 1856.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I have read with interest your article, on the authorship of Hon. EDWARD COLES, and the participation of the Anti-Slavery clause of the Ordinance of 1787. Mr. COLES has been frequently before mentioned as a witness whose testimony was very important to the determination of that question. Of his truthfulness I entertain no doubt, but I cannot regard him as conclusive authority; nor do I think the evidence he adduces in support of the claim set up in behalf of JEFFERSON to the paternity of that great act of statesmanship by any means satisfactory.

In the first place, Gov. COLES is a Virginian by birth, and, apparently, therefore, a good deal of that State pride, which is natural and commendable, and which leads him to look upon whatever can increase and illustrate the reputation of Virginia's greatest son, after WASHINGTON, as a part of his own patrimony. Mr. COLES was, I think, Private Secretary of President MADISON, and was appointed by him Governor of either Illinois or Indiana. Gov. COLES naturally received with great deference any statement or suggestion of his patron upon public affairs, but I think it would be safer to trust the written memorials left by MADISON of his own opinions and convictions upon most and nearest than to receive the recollections of Mr. COLES respecting them, derived from his conversations.

I wish at the outset to call attention to a serious discrepancy between a passage from Mr. COLES' address quoted in your article, and Mr. MADISON's own recorded declarations. Mr. COLES says that MADISON told him that the Anti-Slavery clause of the ordinance was agreed to by the slaveholders in Congress and the Constitutional Convention as a compensation to the North for the provision inserted in the constitution to restore fugitive slaves. I am perfectly satisfied from my investigations on this subject that Mr. MADISON never could have supposed that any such compact was made, although the assertion cited by Mr. COLES in support of it, that conferences were held between the leading members of Congress and the Convention, both bodies being in session at the time, is undoubtedly correct. It cannot be questioned that every member of the Constitutional Convention was well aware that Congress had passed the ordinance with the prohibitory clause as to Slavery, and if that prohibition had been considered an equivalent for the right to reclaim fugitive slaves, it is certain that the Convention would have formally ratified the restriction as to Slavery when they adopted the section relative to fugitives. The prohibition of Slavery in the Northwest was passed by Congress July 13, 1787, and the clause respecting fugitives was adopted by the Convention on the 29th of August without any debate. The day before, however, there had been a warm discussion over a motion by BUTLER, of South Carolina, to add this, or an equivalent provision, to the section for the delivery of fugitive criminals, wherein no allusion was made to the action of Congress on the subject of Slavery in the Territories. If the two measures had been the balanced concessions of a compromise suggested by Congress, but accepted by the Convention, of course that fact would have been urged by BUTLER, PINCKNEY and MADISON, with fiery zeal. They did not allude to the ordinance, nor to the Congress or its action on that or any other subject.

But this is only collateral evidence. Mr. MADISON has left us direct testimony that he did believe the ordinance with the Anti-Slavery clause to have been the result of a compromise. For, in the first place, he declared that the Congress which passed it had "no shadow of authority" to do so; and, in the next place, proposed to disregard it and declare it null and void. On the 27th of November, 1819, Mr. MADISON wrote a letter to Mr. WARE, of Philadelphia, upon the point of the exclusion of Slavery from the Territories by Congress, in which he says, immediately after a direct allusion to the ordinance for the government of the Northwest Territory:

"Whether the Convention could have looked to the existence of Slavery at all in the new States is a point on which I can add but little to what has been already stated."

Had the prohibition of Slavery in the States and Territories of the Northwest, and the return of fugitive negroes been equivalent considerations of a solemn compact between the North and South, surely Mr. MADISON would not have expressed doubts whether the Convention looked to Slavery at all in the new States. Slavery would, in that case, have been the only object at which the Convention would have looked.

The fact is, that Mr. MADISON, like FRANKLIN, WASHINGTON, JEFFERSON, and WILSON, of Pennsylvania, looked upon Slavery as a temporary evil, which would be an exception to and a blot upon the general system of Republican institutions which they were founding, should it become permanent. Therefore they made no compromises relating to it intended to be of any long duration. They knew Republicanism and Slavery to be totally incompatible, and that, if the Republic did not smother Slavery, Slavery would strangle the Republic. And in that fact we have the key to all the omissions and the evasions of the Constitution on the subject.

But to come back to the "authorship" of the ordinance—in my opinion there has yet been no perfectly reliable account of its origin. As the great distinctive feature of NATHAN DANE's ordinance was the Anti-Slavery clause, witness and public speakers have fallen into the habit of designating a single section by the name of the whole. DANE is certainly not entitled to the honor of the original conception of the Slavery restriction, but he is entitled to the great merit of framing an able and sagacious measure of State policy, into which he incorporated the prohibition, and by the passage of the Bill gave to the latter the form and effect of law; converting the mere suggestion of his predecessors into a fixed and immutable institution of an extended empire and a mighty people.

In the Spring of 1784, Mr. JEFFERSON moved for the appointment of a Committee to frame a plan of Government for the Northwest Territory, then recently become the property of the United States by the cession of New-York, Connecticut, Massachusetts and Virginia, (and not by the deed of Virginia alone, although she was the last to cede her claims.) This Committee consisted of JEFFERSON, Chairman; CHASE, of Maryland; and HOWES, of Rhode Island. From the printed records of the old Congress it is not practicable to discover who was the author of the report rendered by this Committee, nor who suggested the particular proposition which has given it immortality. That proposition was as follows:

"After the year 1800 of the Christian era there shall be neither Slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of the said States, otherwise than in punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted to have been personally guilty."

Mr. COLES says JEFFERSON furnished the Committee with the draft upon which the report was formed. That is a very important fact, if established by competent evidence. But where is the evidence? Again, what is the proof that this prohibition of Slavery was contained in the draft given to the Committee? Who knows but that it was moved as an amendment by HOWES or CHASE, and skulked by the votes of these two against JEFFERSON's opposition?

In my opinion there is one very strong reason for supposing that Mr. JEFFERSON was not the author of the prohibitory clause, and that is, that in 1820 he repudiated its principle by opposing the application of the provision to the Territory west of the Mississippi, in the same latitude as that in which it was originally applied. I cannot overlay my hand upon the proof of this, but the fact is so notorious that I presume it will not be disputed by anybody. In his famous letter upon the Missouri controversy, in which he said the proposition to exclude Slavery from a territory by act of Congress struck his ears "like a fire bell in the night," he suggested a doubt of the power of Congress, but was quite positive against the expediency of its exercise. When the circumstances under which this letter was written are considered, it will be found entirely incompatible with the assumption that JEFFERSON was the originator and suggester of the prohibition of Slavery in the Northwest Territory east of the Mississippi. That, as I have before remarked, was a great, distinctive, radical measure of State policy, forming a landmark in the statesmanship of the age, embodying a principle essential to the consistency and perpetuity of the Republican system inaugurated by the Declaration of Independence, and designed to be secured by the Constitution. Without it the ordinance for the Government of the Territories would have been a very ordinary and common place piece of legislative machinery. It was adopted and confirmed by the first Congress under the Federal Constitution. It had operated beneficently for thirty-one years. It had given not only prosperity and population to a vast and fruitful region, but had secured therein morality, popular intelligence, and public tranquillity. Is it possible that JEFFERSON would have disowned and even denounced the offspring of his own brain in view of these results? But to complete the parallel, we must observe that it was in 1820 proposed to apply the restriction of 1787 to a territory of almost the same extent, of the same characteristics of soil, climate, and production, as that which it had already covered with blessings. Can it be supposed that the Father of the ordinance would, under such circumstances, have aspersed it before the world, have doubted the power of Congress to adopt it, and denied its right to do so if the power existed?

I cannot resist the evidence that Mr. JEFFERSON received the clause from some unknown hand, incorporated it reluctantly or hesitatingly in his first projet for the government of the North West, and consented to it by way of a concession to the feelings and prejudices of the Northern States against Slavery; and finally, when a fitting occasion offered, decidedly and effectively opposed it.

From the incomplete records and memorials of the time, I have derived the impression that the honor of the first conception of the prohibition belongs to RUFUS KING, Mr. CHASE, or Mr. HOWELL, and not to Mr. JEFFERSON. But there is hardly room for doubt that to Mr. KING and NATHAN DANE belong the credit and fame attending to persevering advocacy of this great measure, and its establishment as a principle in the legislation of the country. ### The Cross on the Rocky Mountains.

Ever since the nomination of Col. FREMONT, the leading Fillmore organs have been bessing about, after items and scraps in his life, out of which to make it appear that he is a Roman Catholic. The Express of this City has just hit upon a fact which it regards as a clincher. It cites, with an air of triumph, the particular page of the particular Congressional document, in which FREMONT himself confesses that he planted the cross on the Rocky Mountains—as did "the early travelers and explorers of our country." The incident here alluded to occurred in August, 1842, soon after FREMONT had made his ascent of the highest peak of the Rocky Mountains, and hoisted the American flag. He had reached Rock Independence on his return homeward. The rock is entirely bare, and in some instances as high up as sixty or eighty feet the names of visitors are inscribed. What occurred here is best told in FREMONT's own words, which we copy as follows, from his journal, and which the Express may set down as his confession:

"Here, not unmindful of the custom of early travelers and explorers of our country, I engraved on this rock of the Far West a symbol of the Christian faith. Among the thickly inscribed names, I made on the hard granite the impression of a large cross, which I covered with a black preparation of India rubber, well calculated to resist the influence of wind and rain. It stands amidst the names of many who have long since found their way to the grave, and for whom the huge rock is a giant gravestone.

One GEORGE WEYMOUTH was sent out to Maine, by the Earl of SOUTHAMPTON, Lord ARUNDEL, and others, and, in the narrative of his discoveries, he says: 'the next day we ascended in our pinnace that part of the river which lies more to the westward, carrying with us a cross,—a thing never omitted by any Christian traveler,—which we erected at the ultimate end of our route.' This was in the year 1605; and in 1842 I obeyed the feeling of the early travelers, and left the impression of the cross deeply engraved on the vast rock, one thousand miles beyond the Mississippi, to which discoverers have given the national name of Rock Independence."

That individual is certainly to be pitied, whose sensibilities have become so blunted with party spirit, whose mental vision is so distorted by bigotry, as to unfit him to appreciate the moral grandeur and beauty,—and the historical significance of such an incident as that here recorded. What else could Col. FREMONT have inscribed with so much propriety on that wall of rock as "the symbol of the Christian faith"—the emblem which has preserved itself through the vicissitudes of eighteen centuries as the distinguishing mark of Christianity and modern civilization—the rallying sign of the Christians in their struggles against the Pagans and Mohammedans—and the messenger of comfort and reconciliation to all believers in Christ, without distinction of sect? The cross, still where FREMONT left it, and it will remain there for ages to come, a welcome way-mark to the traveler, in his journey across the continent, a token to the savages of the wilderness of "peace on earth, and good will to men," and a lasting monument to the memory of the man who placed it there.

But there is nothing in all this to stir the enthusiasm of the Express, nothing at all in it whatever, but the evidence that FREMONT is a Romanist. It is no use now, to say that the cross is just as much the symbol of Protestantism as of Popery. FREMONT refers in the words above quoted to an English Protestant "one GEORGE WEYMOUTH," who was sent out on an exploring tour to Maine in 1605, and who erected a cross on the bank of a certain river which he ascended. The Express, however, if it had been passing along that way at that time, would doubtless have pulled down the cross erected by WEYMOUTH, and hoisted in its place a flag with the motto: "Down with the Pope." Every body knows that the cross still occupies a conspicuous place in many Protestant Churches, and it is no uncommon thing for it to be worn as an ornament by ladies who are just as good Protestants as the Express. But notwithstanding all this, the Express will have it that FREMONT is a Papist, because forsooth he inscribed a cross on Rock Independence. We expect in a few days, to see the name of MARTIN LUTHER stricken out from the list of Reformers by the Express, because the coat of arms which he wore and of which he was proud, bore a cross upon it.

SURNAMES.—The Registrar-General estimates that there are nearly forty thousand different surnames in England. It is estimated that among these there are 58,000 families bearing the name of Smith, and 51,000 bearing the name of Jones. The Smiths and Joneses alone are supposed to include about half a million of the population. "In an average it seems that 1 person in 73 is a Smith; 1 in 76 a Jones, 1 in 112 a Williams, 1 in 148 a Taylor; 1 in 163 a Davies, and 1 in 174 a Brown." Among the list of peculiar names given we note the following:—Affection, Alabaster, Albubones, Awkward, Baby, Bolstan By (the shortest English name,) Camomile, Coffee, Dagger, Eggbeat, Fowls, Fuzzy, Gin, Hogsflesh, Kite, Silly, Kiss, Lumber, Middle, Nutbrown, Onion, Potatoe, Quince, Rabbit, Sanctuary, Tombs, Unit, Vulgar, Waddle, Yellow, and Zeal.—Critic.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE UNION.

The Movement for a New Version of the Bible.

Letter of Resignation of Rev. Archibald Maclay, D.D., as President of the Union.

Important and interesting Correspondence.

STILLWATER, N. Y., June 6, 1856.

Rev. A. MACLAY, D. D.: My esteemed Father—I have just heard with grief that you have resigned your offices President of the American Bible Union; and I am anxious to know what it is that has led you to such a step. Will you have the kindness to inform me? I have for some time felt a deep solicitude in regard to the affairs of the Union; and, though it would pain me exceedingly to find anything is going wrong, yet if it be so really, I would have nothing concealed; lest evils which, if taken in time, might be corrected, grow too great for any remedy. Please let me hear from you at your earliest convenience. Yours for the truth,

JOHN L. FULTON.

NEW-YORK, June 19, 1856.

DEAR BROTHER FULTON: My resignation was sent to the Secretary of the American Bible Union the 21st of May. I have not received any official notice of its acceptance, but have understood from some of those who were present that it came before the Board on the 4th inst.; that its acceptance was moved by the Corresponding Secretary in a series of resolutions which he said had been approved by the Committee on Versions and the other standing Committees; that WM. COLGATE, Esq., proposed the appointment of a special Committee to prepare suitable resolutions, and report at a subsequent meeting, and WM. D. MURRAY, Esq., wished a Committee appointed to confer with me, to see if the cause of my resignation could not be removed; but the Secretary thought the Board should pass his resolutions at once, as they might not feel free to make such a conciliatory expression at any future time, and they were passed; whereupon the Secretary moved to appoint a Committee of five to nominate my successor, and report at that meeting. Brother JUDD inquired if this also had been before the Standing Committees, and was answered by the Secretary in the affirmative. He maintained that the election of a President belonged properly to the Union, and that the power to fill vacancies should not be exercised by the Board in the appointment of this officer, especially for so short a time before the Anniversary, unless demanded by exigencies such as do not at present exist; and that no committee or officer should prepare such business beforehand. Other members urged the subject deferred, and proposed that if the Committee were appointed it should report at the next meeting. But the Secretary said the Board might be attacked, and it was important for them to present an unbroken front. So the motion was carried. Dr. ADAMS nominated Messrs. Wyckoff, Pise, Shepard, Remington and Gillman as the Committee, which was appointed. The Secretary moved that the Committee have leave to retire, and the motion was carried. The Secretary moved that, while the Committee were out, the Board spend the time in prayer for divine direction. Brother WM. D. MURRAY thought this was one of the few cases where such a prayer was inappropriate, as the matter seemed to have been already determined. But the motion prevailed, and Messrs. BAKER and D. S. PARSLOW prayed for divine direction. After a few minutes the Committee returned and reported the nomination of Rev. T. ARMITAGE, D. D., for President. A motion was then made by Brother TARBY to lay this report on the table till the next regular meeting. Brother COLGATE and others also thought the Board better take a month to think of the subject before any final action. But the motion of brother TARBY was lost, and the report adopted by a majority vote.

I give you these particulars because there is a necessary though not an obviously apparent connection between them and some others to which your attention will be hereafter called, and because they show that, although the Board, as such, may appear to have taken but little time to fix upon my successor, yet the selection was not made without the usual mode of deliberation; and I hope it may prove to have been determined by divine direction.

The duty which I have discharged in resigning the Presidency of the American Bible Union, and withdrawing from its Board of Managers, has been a very painful one. You know how much the Bible Union has been to me, and how much I have labored to promote the object of its organization. You need no assurance, therefore, to satisfy you that I would not abandon the enterprise for any trifling consideration.

Some of my esteemed friends, of whom I is proper to mention the names of Dr. O. B. JUDD, LL. D., urged me to withhold my resignation, and retain my official connection with the Union till the next Anniversary. But, after several months' deliberation, in deference to such solicitations—after many prayers for a knowledge of the mind of God in this matter, and for grace to do His will, I concluded to submit my resignation to the Board without further delay.

I have no wish to make any exposure discreditable to the Bible Union, except what is necessary to explain the steps I have taken, and to discharge my responsibilities in this undertaking. But you, in common with many of my numerous friends, who have a right to know the grounds of my action, have already pressed me with inquiries on the subject, and I have reason to believe that such inquiries will be greatly multiplied,—so that I have deemed it not only due to myself, but also obligatory upon me, as an honest man and a Christian, to answer them frankly once for all.

During the last six years, from the origin of the Bible Union till a few months ago, I labored as its agent, most of the time at a distance from the seat of its operations; so that I had but very little opportunity to examine minutely the internal management of the Institution. I relied mainly on the published documents of the Union, to which the official correspondence of the Secretary seldom added anything of importance. I did not so much as know the names of the revisers, with a few exceptions. Hence the statements which I made, publicly and privately, during my agency, rested for the most part on the assurances of those for whom I acted.

But on being elected President of the Union, in October, 1855, I found myself in a position of more direct and unqualified responsibility; and under these circumstances I felt the importance of becoming more particularly acquainted with the operations of the body. I then for the first time ascertained who the revisers were; and found, to my astonishment, that, instead of there having been about forty individuals actually engaged in translating the New Testament, as I had understood from the Secretary, and often stated, there had not been more than twenty-three or twenty-four. Instead of all these being competent scholars, as I had supposed, and as the plan of the Union required, and as is often reiterated in the official documents of the Union, some of them unquestionably lacked the essential qualifications of a translator.

Here I reluctantly suspended my investigation, to visit Baltimore, as an agent, at the earnest solicitation of the Secretary.

Hitherto it had been, I believe, the invariable custom of the Board to meet for organization, the appointment of Standing Committees, &c., the next week after the Anniversary. But this year that time passed and no meeting of the Board was called; for which omission no adequate reason, so far as I know, was then assigned. I left soon after with a heavy heart, weighed down with anxious solicitude, in regard to the issue of this great enterprise, to which I had given so many years of my life. I made it the subject of special and earnest prayer, in which I came to the conclusion that I ought to resign my agency and devote my attention, as President, to the operations of the Union in New-York. I accordingly returned to this City as soon as the object of my visit to Baltimore was accomplished.

On my arrival here, I found that, during my absence, in the organization of the Board, at its meeting in November, (one of the Vice Presidents, Rev. T. ARMITAGE, D. D., being in the Chair,) the Committee on Versions, and the Committee on Finance, had undergone important changes, the character of which, and the alleged reasons for which, greatly impaired my confidence in the directing power of the Board. And although I am not naturally suspicious, but rather confiding, yet I could not in this case overlook the appearance of design in omitting the October meeting, and urging me to Baltimore before the regular meeting in November; as the projector of these changes had the means of knowing that no such prescriptive nominations could ever be made to the Board, though me as its Chairman.

On resuming my examination in the revisers' department, I found that numerous translations had been made, which, though not in all cases inconsistent with good scholarship, were nevertheless calculated, on other grounds, to impair the character of the Union, and to shake the confidence of men in the truth of God's word. Of these the following may serve as specimens:

"In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and God was the word."—John i. 1.

"He it is that immerses in a holy spirit."—John i. 33.

"If any one be not born of water and spirit."—John iii. 5.

"Truth has sent me down to you myself, if he be not the Father dwelling within us."—John v. 19.

"But this he said of the spirit which those believing on him were about to receive; for there was not yet a holy spirit."—John vii. 39.

"And I give to them eternal life, and they shall not perish forever."—John x. 28.

"Jesus, therefore, when he saw her weeping, and the Jews, who came with her, weeping, groaned in the spirit, and troubled himself."—John xi. 33.

"Who were begotten—not of blood, nor of a will of flesh, nor of a will of man—but of God. And the word became flesh, and tabernacled among us (and we saw his glory, a glory as of one only begotten of a father) full of grace and truth."—John i. 12, 14.

These are by no means the most objectionable readings. In this and other books are some which I would not disclose to the public eye. And on a closer examination in the department of revision, I found that, in addition to the incorrect translations already referred to, the misguided hand of the reviser had been rashly laid upon the original text, as it seemed to me, without any authority of the Board. It will be recollected that, in the famous Amity-street letter, Dr. WILLIAMS charged the Bible Union with purpose, contrary, in withholding from the Candidate a knowledge of the Greek text, to be issued as the standard of revision; and that in the Amity-street letter, written by Dr. JUDD, and adopted by the Board, it was said:

"This subject received our early and prayerful attention, and after obtaining the most satisfactory information, we adopted the Greek text, critically edited, as our own standard, and published our version, expressing it, with the approval of competent scholars, to be our own version, in the only sense in which any version can be, and published our version accordingly, in the year of our Lord 1851."

Previous to that time the Board had published "General Rules for the Direction of Translators and Revisers," of which the third reads thus:

"Translations or revisions of the New Testament must be made from the received Greek text, critically edited, with known errors corrected."

Also certain "Special Instructions to the Revisers of the English New Testament," of which the first reads as follows:

"The common English version must be the basis of revision; the Greek text, last printed by Scrivener, and the Stephanic edition of 1550."

These are all the rules of the Union respecting the Greek text; neither of them has ever been abrogated or altered; and as they stand, they admit of no departure from the "received text" as critically edited, (not by revisers of the Bible Union, but by distinguished scholars in times past,) and subsequently published by Bagster and Sons in 1851. Yet it appeared, on examination, that some revisers had undertaken what seemed to me even more presumptuous than the selection of some other text; such as Griesbach's, Scholz's, or Tischendorf's, and I need not say that the preparation of a new, independent recension by competent hands from original sources, viz. a revision of the "received Greek text," by weighing all the different manuscripts, to ascertain the relative value of their various readings, as given by second-hand authorities, rectifying, or modifying these readings by ancient versions and patristic writings, collating and comparing the opinions of different editors; then selecting or rejecting any particular reading, according as it was found to be, in the reviser's judgment, genuine or spurious: his English version being conformed to this eclectic edition of the Greek text. In one book, which came under my observation, after it had been stereotyped, a cursory examination showed that the reviser had deviated from the "received Greek text" in two places, by adding something to it; in twelve places, by substituting something for it; in twenty-two places, by rejecting something of it. And one of the portions rejected as spurious, embraced twelve consecutive verses! In another place the following passage is cast out of the Bible:

"For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool, and troubled the water; whosoever then first after the troubling of the water stepped in, was made whole of whatsoever disease he had."

Where the common version reads,

"That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life," the received Greek text has been so critically edited that in the revised English version, the same passage read thus: "That every one that believes on him may have eternal life." And the rejection of "Jesus," "John," "Christ," and "Amen," are specimens of the smaller changes, which have resulted from this revision of the Greek text.

Now, it is not the question with me, whether the reviser is right or wrong, as to the genuineness of these passages; but the question is, whether any such matter has ever been submitted to the judgment of a reviser by the Board of the Bible Union. To me the very supposition of such a thing is absurd. For there could be no reason in selecting, as a standard, the "received text," if the reviser is left at liberty to modify it at discretion. If we so interpret the clause, "critically edited, with known errors corrected," as to allow a reviser to depart from the "received text," as "published Bagster & Sons in 1851," then he is at liberty, if his judgment so determine, to take GRIESBACH's text, or any other, which has ever been critically edited, with what the reviser may judge to merchant "known errors," corrected from the "received text." But such interpretation can be fairly put upon that clause. I admit that the Board might have selected some other text, such as SCHOLZ's or TISCHENDORF's, had they deemed it was wise to do so: or it might have employed competent scholars to prepare an independent recension from original manuscripts, ancient versions, &c., which could have been made the standard of translations after it had been approved as such. But I do not believe that the Board could understandingly have committed to every reviser in its employ the task of making up a new edition of the "received Greek text," or of modifying any existing edition, by a discretionary selection or rejection of words, phrases and passages, out of all the various readings that have ever been discovered—no two revisers making their selection or rejection upon the same principles.

At all events, I never understood that persons employed by the Bible Union to revise the common English version were authorized or at liberty to use the Greek text. Had I so understood it, and known the men, I certainly should never have allowed my humble name to be associated with the enterprise.

The Secretary urged me again to leave New-York and travel abroad as an agent. I informed him that, with the views which I then entertained, I could not conscientiously act in the capacity of an agent; that, among other things, I had assured the people that we have complete possession of the Scriptures, and that the funds of the Union were judiciously and economically expended, but I could do so no longer; that I had aimed to live an honest man, and I meant to die an honest man; and that if I were to go out and publish my honest impressions regarding the operations of the Bible Union, I should only damage its reputation, which, under existing circumstances, I was not prepared to do. One would have supposed that such a statement would have precluded any further request from the Secretary for me to go abroad as an agent of the Union. His subsequent repeated reiteration of this request, besides the imputation of a disbelief in my own statement which it conveyed, exhibited such a solicitude for the services, and such an indifference for the conscientious views of an agent, as equally surprised and pained me. I was the more resolved to examine thoroughly the whole policy and conduct of the Institution; to inquire more fully into the character and qualifications of our revisers, the practical working of our plan for the production of a revised English version, the condition and effect of our periodical publications, and the appropriate economy of our expenditures. I accordingly resigned my agency, and went on with the examination. But finding it difficult to prosecute this investigation single-handed, I consulted with a venerable brother, who was an officer of the Union, and a tried friend of the cause. I found that he had had, for a long time, a similar solicitude in regard to the conduct of our affairs, and was prepared to sympathize with me in the matter. He at once brought his practical mind to devise some plan by which our hopes and fears might be resolved, and by which whatever evils should be found to exist might be remedied. He proposed a Committee of Investigation, and, pursuant to this proposition, he offered, in a meeting of the Board held January, 1856, the following:

Resolved, That a Committee of five be appointed to look at the present condition and practical working of our enterprise, with a view to the greatest economy of our means consistent with the most thorough and speedy accomplishment of our work; and to report the result of their examination as soon as practicable, with such recommendations as the case shall seem to demand; and that the officers and revisers be requested to furnish all the facilities in their power, which the Committee may require for the most thorough performance of their duty.

After an ineffectual attempt of the Secretary to have the examination referred to one of the Standing Committees, of which he himself was a member, the resolution was adopted, and Messrs. Wm. Colgate, R. Baker, Geo. W. Abbe, O. B. Judd and A. Maclay were appointed such Committee. Then, at the same meeting, on motion of Mr. MERWIN, Messrs. WYCKOFF and BARNES were added. Then, before the Committee had been convened, I was requested by Mr. BUCKNER and others to call a special meeting of the Board, for the ostensible purpose of appointing an agent, and adjusting the salary of a reviser. The Board met, the agent was appointed, but the matter of a salary was not brought up. As the Board seemed ready to adjourn without having done an thing to justify the calling of a Special Meeting, Mr. MERWIN said the denomination to which he belonged was not represented on the Committee of Investigation, and he would, therefore, move the addition of Messrs. E. SMITH and S. E. SHEPARD. After these had been appointed, Dr. ARMITAGE said there was another denomination in the Board which was not represented on that Committee, and he would, therefore, move the addition of T. R. STILLMAN, who was thereupon appointed. I had then no doubt as to the real object of the Special Meeting of the Board, which was the largest, I think, that I ever attended; nor could I have any doubt as to the object of such additions to the Committee. I frankly expressed the opinion that the Secretary ought not to be on any Committee, and least of all, on that Committee, which was to examine matters of his own transaction. The introduction of denominational representation in the appointment of Committees, was also strongly deprecated by Brother JUDD, as contrary to the fundamental principle of our organization, and subversive of that unity of purpose which he deemed essential to our successful cooperation. It was, the first time, he said, since the origin of our enterprise, that sectarian elements had ever been stirred, or recognized, in the Board of the American Bible Union.

With the Committee so constituted, it was not to be expected that the object of an impartial investigation could be attained; as the result thus far has clearly proved. By the most indefatigable exertion, and searching inquiries, however, much important information has been elicited; but in the only two points on which the Committee has yet been called to vote, what seemed to me self-evidently right could not be sustained. It appeared to be a settled axiom, with those who had been added to the original Committee, that nothing should be done which would imply the least censure against the Secretary. For example: It was found that the revised version of Job, by Dr. CONANT, had been stereotyped, by order of the Secretary, in six different forms, without any examination by competent scholars, as is required by the general plan of the Union, and the special contract with Dr. CONANT, and without any authorization of the Board for more than one form. Yet the majority of that Committee voted against the following:

"Resolved, That we recommend that the Stereotype plates, as made by a reviser of the American Bible Union, be not printed in more than one form, nor stereotyped in more than one set of plates, till the work shall be examined by other scholars, as provided for in the plan of revision adopted by the Board."

Messrs. COLGATE, ABBE and JUDD voted for it; Messrs. WYCKOFF, BARNES, SHEPARD, SMITH and STILLMAN against it! Dr. HAMMOND and myself being absent.

Again, it was found that the Hebrew of Job had been, by order of the Secretary, without the knowledge of the Board, stereotyped in three different forms, the number of which was two a priority to any book, with various readings and grammatical notes, for the use of students learning the Hebrew language; such a book, as a society, which duly and exclusively adopted as "the pure and authentic text of the most faithful version of the Scriptures in all languages," could not, consistently, allow to be published. The following resolution, which this Committee rejected, was then offered and carried:

"Resolved, That the stereotype plates of one of the original Scriptures be printed or stereotyped in the name or at the expense of the American Bible Union, as a school-book, to be used in acquiring a knowledge of the Hebrew or the Greek language."

Messrs. COLGATE, ABBE, JUDD and SMITH voted for it, the vote of Mr. SMITH being previously explained and qualified; Messrs. WYCKOFF, BARNES, SHEPARD and STILLMAN, against it; Dr. BAKER and myself being absent.

As I said, these resolutions appeared to me self-evidently right, and under existing circumstances necessary. Indeed, the occasion which called them forth, and the opposition made to their passage, demonstrated such a disregard of the Constitution, and the established rules of the Bible Union, that my worst fears for the safety of our enterprise, were confirmed; and I told the brethren, at a meeting previous to that in which the vote was taken, that if such a resolution, offered under such circumstances, could not be passed, I should be compelled to retire from the Institution, as I would from a sinking ship.

I know that brother CONANT, in that extraordinary letter of April 28, 1856, which the Secretary got up and sent out as a Circular of the Bible Union, pronounces my dissatisfaction "groundless," attributing it to mental imbecility; and this judgment, though contrary to my own consciousness, would have had great weight on my mind, if he were not himself an interested party. But a man who has already received nearly six thousand dollars before finishing the translation of Job, on a contract which secures to him, in addition to a salary of $1,500 from the Theological Seminary at Rochester, $2,000 a year for the portion of time not required in his professional duties, till he shall have completed the Old Testament, with a copy-right interest, and a percentage on the future sales of his translation, when published with notes; a man for whose pupils the Hebrew school-book, with grammatical notes, was specially designed, and the stereotyping of whose translation, in six different forms, without any examination by other scholars, according to the contract, and without any authorization of the Board, was one occasion of my dissatisfaction, complete position, in regard to the affairs under consideration, which greatly depreciates, if it does not entirely destroy, the admissibility of his testimony. And I think that all well informed impartial men will agree that he, who has such grounds for his own satisfaction, is not sufficiently disinterested to sit in judgment upon my dissatisfaction; especially when the one to be judged is, as he says, "evidently feeling the weight of years," and to pronounce the honest anxious fears of such a one "groundless." At all events, I cannot defer to his judgment in this matter.

The plan of revision adopted by the Board differs materially from that which seemed to me the best. But I looked upon it as combining some peculiar advantages, and thought that, if it could be faithfully carried out, we should secure an English version far superior to the one now in common use; and I have always advocated the revision enterprise on the principles of translation, and the rules of procedure laid down in the official documents of the Bible Union. One of these rules reads as follows:

"ANNOS at the revision of any one book of the New Testament is finished, it shall be sent to the Secretary of the Bible Union, or to such other person as shall be designated by the Committee on Versions, in order that copies may be taken and furnished to the revisers of the other books, to be returned with their suggestions to the reviser or revisers of that book. After being re-revised, with the aid of their suggestions, a carefully prepared copy shall be forwarded to the Secretary."

The process of examination and revision, as prescribed in this rule, is set forth by Dr. ARMITAGE in his Report to the Memphis Convention; by Rev. A. WHEELOCK, in his Sermon before the Union; by Dr. LYND, in his Address before the Union, by Rev. J. CHALLEN, in his Address before the Union; by Dr. EATON, in his Address before the Union; by WM. H. WYCKOFF, indorsed by Dr. COXE and WM. COLGATE, Esq., in Tract No. 11; and often elsewhere.

Notwithstanding the plain provisions of this rule, it was found that some portions of the revised version had been stereotyped more than a year without being submitted to any other reviser for examination, and that a number of revisions in manuscript, made by some of the most distinguished scholars employed on the work in this country, had been long since received and laid aside, as not worthy of the examination provided for in the above rule. It then appeared that the Committee on Versions, composed of Messrs. Wyckoff and Armitage, Baker, Burlee, and I. T. Smith, claimed the prerogative of passing judgment upon the merits of every reviser's work, selecting such as they considered fit to be printed and subjected to the criticism of the other revisers, as "the basis of the final examination," laying aside others to be submitted, without such criticism or revision, in manuscript, to the final body of judges; and putting upon others to be used merely as "aid to others who will do the work more thoroughly;" with the additional prerogative of publishing to the wide world whatever revision they might approve for the purpose, without the previous inspection of any one else but themselves and the author.

In support of these prerogatives, it was held by the Secretary that a resolution, passed by the Board in November, 1852, so modified the original rule, above quoted, as to clothe that Committee with all this discretionary power. It was the first time I ever heard that that rule had been so modified, or that the Committee on Versions had assumed such prerogatives.

The resolution referred to was "to authorize and require the Committee on Versions to examine each revision made by scholars employed by the Union, and to decide whether it be of sufficient merit to justify the Board in printing it, and sending copies to scholars." This, I understood, originated with the Secretary, and came before the Board in a recommendation from the Committee on Versions. It was then regarded, by some at least, as designed to guard against the publication and circulation, beyond the other revisers, of inferior or superficial revisions in the expensive style of that already issued, without interfering with the uniform operation of the rule which required copies of every revision to be taken, by printing or otherwise, for the examination and suggestions of other revisers. The "sending copies to scholars" was not then taken to signify the same, in this resolution, as the "copies taken, and furnished to the revisers of the other books, to be returned, with their suggestions, to the reviser or revisers of that book," in the language of the rule. And after a careful examination, I am satisfied that neither the Board nor the Secretary understood the resolution at the time of its passage, and for years afterwards, as arrogating any portion of the rule in question, and thus changing the plan of revision. For no such thing was declared, or necessarily implied in the resolution, or in any other act of the Board. On the contrary, the rule was repeatedly published, in the name of the Board, without any intimation that a portion of it had been repealed, from November, 1852, to October, 1855. And although the Secretary now maintains that the rule never made it obligatory upon the Board to subject the work of every reviser to the criticism of the other revisers, but only required the work of each to be sent in "order that copies may be taken," &c., yet in September, 1852, he wrote the following preface to the first revision published by the Bible Union:

"In accordance with the plan of the American Bible Union for the revision of the English New Testament, the work of each of the revisers must be subjected to the criticism and suggestions of the other, and of such other scholars as have approved qualifications to assist; and after being again revised by the author, with the aid of their suggestions, be submitted in a committee of Revisers appointed by the Union, for final adjudication upon every word and phrase."

W. H. WYCKOFF, Cor. Secretary."

Such was his interpretation of the rule at that time. And the republication of the, with the clause "must be subjected," unaltered, in an official document of the Union, signed by the President, Secretary and Treasurer, in Jan., 1853, shows not only that the Secretary did not change his interpretation of the rule, with the passage of the resolution in Nov., 1852, but also that that resolution was not then regarded, even by the Secretary himself, as having made such a modification in the plan of revision. The truth is, this new policy is manifestly of much later origin, however much of an earlier date may now be brought to sustain it.

It was my first conviction that, if it was necessary to intrust one Committee with power to control the appointment and conduct of revisers—to pass judgment upon the merit of their work, stamping some portions as approved for the most favorable treatment, and branding others as of little or no value—to be the sole inspectors of such grave printed, previous to their indiscriminate circulation,—that Committee should be composed of first rate scholars. But I saw no necessity or occasion for investing any Committee of the Bible Union with such unconstitutional power. A strict adherence to the original plan seemed to me the only safe course; and such a deviation as that which has been pursued now is being presented by the Committee on Versions, I am satisfied is fraught with the most imminent danger if not with certain disaster, to the enterprise. The plan of saving money and time by such a deviation, in my judgment, extremely frivolous, compared with the risk and damage consequent upon it. And I am amazed that, with no other plea, the Secretary should contend so pertinaciously to secure this most absolute power over the revisers and their work, to the Committee on Versions, of which he himself, from his official position, is the head and life and soul.

But enough for this matter. At a meeting held with members

[illegible] that to the charge he attributed his "great-[illegible]" [illegible] statements. No "complaint, [illegible] was ever made to the Committee [illegible] by the Board, and the Committee [illegible] that the purpose have existed, or [illegible] by referring to the resolution on [illegible] application, as quoted on p. 18. That Committee has not yet reported, nor is it now investigation completed. It has taken no action on any [illegible] the resolutions given above, [illegible] in relation to Dr. COGZARY's work. And I understand Mr. Cobb to declare that he never said anything which would warrant the above statement of Dr. COGZARY. By what authority Dr. COGZARY takes the witness of the Committee into his own hands, appeals a week in this city making inquiries, and spends a week in Philadelphia doing the same, [illegible] the investigation finished, and publishes the result to the world, all before any final action has been taken by the Committee itself, is more than I can [illegible]. Indeed, such a course seems to me decidedly inconsistent with his relations and obligations to the Union as a reviser. In his contract with the Board, he agreed to devote all the time, and exercise all his professional ability, to the work of revision. I am very sorry that he should now leave that work to go, after a week's investigation, the origin of all my difficulties—the imbecility of one clerk, who, notwithstanding he had six family have been supplied, for the last three years, with a good part of the duty which should fall to them. I am more amazed that the Company should publish such a letter on the subject of the Bible Union, without a special act of the Board.

In all this there is an assumption of power which I know of no circumstance will justify, a prodigality of means which no abundance of concentrated exertion will warrant, a mode of publishing the first results of a revision inconsistent with the general plan of the Union and the special contracts of the Board, and a method for the communication of miscellaneous matter perfectly ruinous to the reputation of the Union. Some articles have been published in the Monthly Reporter, containing statements in relation to the Revision and literary business which [illegible] I am credibly informed that in the Hebrew of the April number there are upwards of one hundred and forty typographical errors.

On looking into the financial department I found the same state of things. The funds of the Union were, to a great extent, disbursed by the stipendiary office-bearers, the business of the Finance Committee being but little, if anything, more than to sanction expenditures already made. And while the Constitution prohibits the Treasurer from paying out money, except on orders of the Board certified by the Recording Secretary, I found that the same man, who is a salaried employé, was acting as Recording Secretary and Assistant Treasurer, making out orders in violation of the spirit of the Constitution, and apparently unknown to most of the functionaries were made to the Corresponding Secretary, and that disbursements were made, to considerable extent, by the Assistant, Mr. BUCKMAN, so that much of the money contributed to the Union never reached the general treasury, except in book account; that moneys were substantially paid out at the discretion of one salaried officer at the room, for purposes which could not be held consistent with trustworthy economy, in a benevolent institution like the Bible Union. I do not mean here to question the integrity of any one; but honesty furnishes no justification for such substantially exercise of distributions of money, such an arrogant disregard of the Constitution in managing the finances of a great Institution.

But in this, as in every other, department, I found myself unable to remedy the existing growing evils. My best endeavors, in the whole affair, instead of being met with candor and frankness, have been captiously and obstinately thwarted.

Being thus compelled to relinquish all hope of reform, and my honest endeavor being so treated, I was constrained some time ago to withdraw from the deliberations of the Board. It only remains for me, therefore, to take care that I be not a party to wrongs which I have, in vain, sought to remedy. And now, fully satisfied, from personal examination, that the funds which I have done so much to collect, in the sick and the poor, to one of the holiest purposes of Christian charity, are being squandered; that a great amount is expended for operations resulting from the one great object of the Institution; that persons are employed to translate the word of God who are not qualified for the work; that unwarrantable liberties have been made, which, if published, would bring into disrepute the most precious doctrines of my faith, and the fundamental tenets of Christianity, as inhabitably revealed in the Holy Scriptures; that, to retain the confidence of the people in the cause of the sacred writings, that publications are likely to be published for indiscriminate circulation, without the previous preliminary examination, prescribed by, and required by, the plan and rules of revision, as originally adopted by the Board; that the controlling power of the Institution has become completely centralized in one man; and that the exercise of that power is not only such as to forbid the hope of reform, but also to blast the fame and influence of every one who shall continue therein. Feeling perfectly assured of all this, I am compelled, by a stern sense of duty, to abandon the enterprise, and be free myself, so far as possible, from all further responsibility. And I can not doubt that my friends, when rightly informed, will justify me in so doing.

No one who is acquainted with me, and knows what the Bible Union has been to me during the six years of its existence, will suppose that I could believe all this upon any slight grounds, or lightly arrive at such a conclusion, and take a step which I know must inflict pain, similar to that which I have myself endured, upon the hearts of many of my best friends, whose hopes, like my own, will thus be sorely blasted.

From successive disappointments, in the great aim of my later life, and from all the excitements of public discussion, I would gladly have withdrawn in silence, to seek in the family and social circle, with whose love a merciful God has blessed me, that repose which may best suit such desires, and which my present demand. But at no period of my life could I have silently lent my name to a course which I consider subject to my brethren and dishonoring to the God of the Bible. And having now, after half a century spent in the ministry of the gospel, devoted all my strength and influence, for the last six years, to inspire the public mind with confidence in what seemed to me the greatest enterprise of the age,—having induced thousands throughout the United States, in the British Provinces, and in Europe, to become self-sacrificing supporters of the American Bible Union—and being myself at last compelled, by the mismanagement of that Institution, which is barely outlined in this letter, to abandon the enterprise, I feel bound, as an honest man, and a Christian, to answer the inquiries which are coming to me from every quarter, by frankly stating, once for all, the reasons of my action.

But, in withdrawing from the American Bible Union, I do not repudiate the principle on which it is based, nor renounce the object for which it was organized. And if, by any reformation, or despite the abuses to which that institution is now subjected, its glorious undertaking should be finally crowned with success, I shall rejoice.

In conclusion, I desire to say that, towards my brethren in the Board of the Bible Union, with some of whom I have been for many years intimately associated, and exchanging many tokens of Christian affection, I retain feelings of unmingled kindness and brotherly love; and, for the patrons of the Union, scattered abroad throughout this country and in Europe, I cherish the most tender of my personal friends, I have the most cordial fellowship. I shall ever hold them in grateful remembrance, which neither distance nor time can obliterate. And, although the step which I have now taken marring, from the field of my labors for the Bible Union, as well as the brevity of my life, which is now so nearly spent, admonishes me that most of these I among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more," in the flesh, yet I rejoice in the precious assurance of a glorious immortality beyond the grave—in the blessed hope that, through the abounding grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, we shall meet at last in Heaven, far above the changing scenes of mortality and sin. Very respectfully and affectionately yours, A. MACLAY.

[illegible] Dr. MACLAY, is my own [illegible] O. S. Jump, LL. D., who, after having participated in deliberations, in consent of unexpelled hour, was induced by Dr. COZZ, Dr. ANSTRAGE, Mr. WYCOFF, and others, to relinquish his post as an editor, and to devote his whole attention to the revision, in behalf of the Board, as a member of the Committee on Revision, [illegible] The Recorder, under date May 5, 1854:

"Resolved, That we authorize the Committee on Revision to hold an arrangement with Rev. O. S. Jump to devote his time and attention exclusively to the business of revision, and the reading of the parts through the press, as shall be deemed necessary, at a salary not to exceed [illegible] dollars per annum."

[illegible] Committee was [illegible] to convey the idea that Mr. Jump was to devote his time from June 1st, 1854; but [illegible] understood by the members of the Board, as Mr. Jump was engaged with the revision, and his salary was paid monthly by the Treasurer, out of the funds of the Union, without any [illegible] upon the Committee, upon May [illegible] 1854, which was [illegible] the Board [illegible] in a member of the Committee on Revision, [illegible] the Board [illegible] with the above resolution. It was understood that his engagement, though on a salary, would be [illegible] as long as the Board [illegible] the work of revision, and he was [illegible] in a member of the Committee on Revision, [illegible] in revision, [illegible] Committee on Revision was [illegible] since that time a change has been made, and the period of time only before the completion of the year, [illegible] Committee on Revision without consulting the Board, notified him that "their contract with him as a reviser was so far at an end." Was arresting the services of Mr. Jump, in thus [illegible] the Union, was at the [illegible] of a man of unquestionable qualifications as a scholar, to my mind one of a peculiar qualification for the [illegible] of the English language, and a man whose [illegible] in the Hebrew, and whose [illegible] and a [illegible] towards the Bible Union, [illegible] I am sure that his sense of duty, [illegible] I understand, also, that gentleman [illegible] in the law have pronounced it illegal, such as [illegible] the right of Dr. Jump, who could not be legally dismissed before the work for which he was engaged, expired. For [illegible] I can find no reasonable notice, and no notice [illegible] of the Committee, which had been in vogue in the course of a contract, and not in accordance therewith. But I have all confidence that my injured brother will take such a course in the matter as Justice and Wisdom ascribe to the conduct of a Christian.

The American Bible Union.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

GREENPORT, CONN., Tuesday, July 22, 1856.

I perceive in your paper of the 21st instant, a communication signed by Mr. THOMAS ARMITAGE, W. H. WYCOFF, E. PERRY, R. S. WESTERN, G. H. SCHOFIELD and S. FINN, in which are some statements in relation to myself that need correction.

In this communication the persons above named, referring, I presume, to a letter addressed by me to Rev. SAM. J. FORSTER, say: "We have good reason to believe that Dr. MACLAY is not the real author of this pamphlet." In reply to this I have simply to say, that I know of no letter or pamphlet over my signature which is not my own.

Again, they say: "We have addressed the most respectful letters to Dr. MACLAY, and other persons, soliciting a copy for the use of the Union. As yet, however, we have been unsuccessful, and can but conclude that there are good reasons why it should be circulated so secretly and withheld so carefully from the Board." It is only necessary to say that the letter in question was designed to answer the inquiries of numerous correspondents, calling for the reasons of resignation, which reasons were known to the Board, before that letter was written. I have never received any request from the Board or its officers for a copy of it.

It is further stated, "when Dr. MACLAY sent in his resignation, it was unaccompanied by any reason whatever." This assertion is unimportant, except to prove the general inaccuracy which pervades the article in matters of fact. Persons may differ about what constitutes a reason. That which has seemed clear to the public, appears to be very obscure to the signers of this communication. Few, however, will fail to find a reason for my resignation as President of the American Bible Union, in the statement which that resignation contained, that I wished to "free myself as far as possible from all further responsibility in the management of its affairs.

In regard to the assertion that I "never submitted a suggestion to the Board personally or in writing, for any change in its operation," it is but justice to one of these signers, the recording secretary, R. S. WESTERN, Esq., to say that he had not an opportunity of knowing the inaccuracy of this statement, as he has been habitually, if not uniformly, absent from meetings of the Board for the last two or three years.

Whether the reasons referred to in this communication of the officers, for the Committee on revisions dismissing "a gentleman" from the service of the Bible Union, without the knowledge of the Board, are "the very best," the public will be better able to judge when that case shall have been fully stated.

We are told that a "thorough investigation" is to be made, and I understand a committee of five persons not connected with the Board has been appointed for that purpose; three of whom, having been engaged as revisers, will find it necessary to examine and decide upon questions which involve the character of their own revisions, the plan upon which they are made, and the manner in which they are to be used, or disposed of. With the greatest respect for this committee, it should be borne in mind that to satisfy the public such investigation must be made by persons who have taken no part in the matters to be examined, and that their report must be made from their own immediate knowledge, independent of any second-hand representations, such as have been too often relied upon already; as for example, in relation to the time when the work would be completed. Thus, in 1851 a most respectable committee reported at the anniversary of the Bible Union, "that all the circumstances of the case appear to justify the expectation that the revision of the New Testament will be completed, and the book in course of publication within the next two or three years;" that is, at farthest, previous to October, 1854.

Much stress has been laid on points comparatively unimportant and irrelevent. It is a recorded fact that more than $150,000 have been already expended by the Bible Union. What the patrons of that Society, and the public generally, wish to know is, whether this large amount of money has been judiciously and economically expended for the legitimate object of the institution, according to its fundamental principles, and the plan on which the funds were contributed; whether competent scholars only have been employed to translate the Scriptures; whether the revisions made are such as to subserve or subvert the cardinal doctrines of Christianity; such as to honor or dishonor the high professions of the Union. Such knowledge I have felt called upon to communicate, and to whatever reproaches or imputations it may subject me, I am consoled by the consciousness of having done my duty. Respectfully yours,

ARCHIBALD MACLAY.

Col. Fremont's Early Education.

NEW-YORK, Monday, July 21, 1856.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

In the Morning Express of Saturday, Mr. BROOKS asserts that Col. FREMONT received his education in a Roman Catholic Institute in Charleston, S. C., under the late Bishop ENGLAND. Although opposed to the party who nominated him—in justice to himself and the memory of his mother—I must these assertions as utterly false from beginning to end. Born in Charleston, I have known him from my earliest days. He was my school mate for many years. I was a member of the same Sunday School class with him; and while he was a member of the Junior Class, Charleston College, he was my most intimate friend. I was standing within a few feet of him when he was confirmed in the Protestant Episcopal Church, by the Bishop of South Carolina. I can vouch that he never had his foot inside of the Catholic Institute spoken of; and I am sure he never spoke to Bishop ENGLAND in his life. He was born a Protestant, educated a Protestant, and has more of a Protestant principle about him than the editor of the Express or the candidate of the prescriptive party he represents. Respectfully yours,

J. G. NELSON.

Politics in Tioga County—Statement of the "Express."

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times:

OWEGO, Tioga County, Monday, July 21, 1856.

The New-York Express of the 19th inst. has a communication from these parts, chronicling the proceedings of a so-called "large and enthusiastic meeting" of a Fillmore Club, in Owego, on the evening of the 16th, and stating, among other things, that "if other parts of the State look as well as ours, compared with last Fall, we are sure to carry the State for gallant FILLMORE."

Now we will give the facts of the case, such as can be backed up by affidavits. The "large and enthusiastic meeting" numbered, when organized, seven human souls, and at no time during the evening were over fifty present, counting spectators from other parties.

Mr. FILLMORE's flattering prospects hereabouts may be calculated from the following: On the evening of the 15th inst., a Young Men's Fremont Club was organized here. There were between two hundred and fifty and three hundred present. The club was addressed by distinguished speakers from abroad, and the most unbounded enthusiasm prevailed. It was made up of nearly all the young men, and bone and sinew of our whole village, and they have gone to work in good earnest. The American Party will not poll more than half the votes it did here last Fall, and the Democrats, who cannot swallow Mr. Pinkerton Buchanan, are as thick as toads after a shower. All these bolters go in strongly for FREMONT. This same state of things prevails all over this county, as well as Chemung, and men of all parties are of the opinion that old Democratic Tioga will roll up a good round majority for the brave Col. FREMONT. VERITAS.

Political Philosophy—Mr. Burlingame and Brooks.

From the Boston Traveller.

The recent flurry at Washington, between Mr. BURLINGAME and Mr. BROOKS, has excited much comment—since, perhaps, that it is intrinsically entitled to. It is not the mere history of a duel, as a part of the political history of the times, and as illustrative of the manners of political men. It is, on the whole, quite instructive; and we shall be surprised if the people do not learn from it a valuable lesson.

Mr. BURLINGAME, in his recent speech, said Mr. BROOKS "smote Mr. SUMNER as Cain smote Abel." This declaration Mr. KEITT, Mr. BROOKS' friend, pronounced false; whereupon Mr. BURLINGAME promptly declared, in the language of the duelist, that he was responsible for what he said—meaning, of course, that he was ready to be called to a personal account in the field, and to justify the words by a resort to the universal and murderous custom of duelling. He could have meant nothing else, as it would new scene; and yet at the time—in reference to a report, spread simultaneously, and by his friends, that he was ready to fight, and had even gone to Washington prepared for an emergency—we expressed a confident opinion that he would do no such thing. It was apparent that we were mistaken. We had probably placed too charitable an estimate upon his principles in regard to the barbarous and wicked practice of duelling, and entertained too high an opinion of his regard for the laws of the State, and the universal public sentiment of the people whom he represents. It was repeated, in presses dyed in pandering with him in politics, that he had contemplated a duel, and was quite prepared at least to accept a challenge; and he was commended, in quarters where such approbation was wholly an unaccustomed sound to New-England ears, for the boldness of his words and the gravity of his purpose to defend them by his blood. Some time of the Northern mind suddenly changed, and for the first time, in the history of Massachusetts, there was a general disposition to sink at the mention of a duel, and to approve or it directly; to justify him for, at least, not to regard with emphasis the growing indignation among us to authorizing a personal fight between men engaged in public service. But when much more than anything else, have struck the public mind, was the language which was publicly addressed to Mr. BURLINGAME on the floor of the House, by one of his own constituency, by one whose office it is to magnify our laws and to administer justice in our Courts.

We quote from this congratulatory address, as it appeared at the time, the following words: "We thank you for your bold and eloquent vindication of Massachusetts. But we are the more gratified, because we know that you were ready to back up bold words by bold deeds. [Renewed cheering.] And you will have an opportunity to do that, for the Southern chivalry will not stomach men who are only talkers."

It is obvious, however, that these notes of preparation did not produce the intimidating effect which was anticipated. Mr. BROOKS is found, taking Mr. BURLINGAME at his word, determined to demand personal satisfaction, and the result of this demand is an entirely new phase of the whole matter. The morals of the question is completely changed. Mr. BURLINGAME did not pretend to make any explanation within the meaning of the "bold words" or to retract them as a mere figure of speech, or excuse declamation. He assured Mr. BROOKS that he intended no reflection upon his personal character; that it was his conduct and not himself that he had denounced; that he made a distinction between the man and the act. In other words, that it is his bold condemnation of the assault, he did not mean to imply even the mildest censure of the assailant; that in depicting the baseness and cowardice of Mr. BROOKS' speech and slander, and in a shield and sword on the field of battle. In this respect, Mr. Wilson's conduct, in like circumstances, stands in admirable contrast to that of Mr. Burlingame. If both erred in saying or doing aught to provoke a duel, the former exhibited true courage in finally and firmly deciding not to do what his honest conviction assured him was religiously wrong; while the latter yielded every element of courage, and betrayed and confirmed his false position by a vain persistence in what from the outset he must have been convinced was not right.

Death of a Reporter.

From the Washington Globe.

Died in this city yesterday morning, in the 44th year of his age, from congestion of the lungs, WILLIAM W. CURRAN. He was brought up to the printing business, and entered the Globe office as a journeyman printer before he was 21 years old, where he remained until he died, except for a short time, when he was a clerk in the General Land Office.

He was an excellent printer, very industrious and persevering, and in a few years made himself a good reporter, while attending to his duties as a printer. Six years ago we put him at the head of our reporting corps in the House of Representatives. On the 16th of May, 1854, there was a very angry debate in the House, and the noise in the Hall was so great that neither the reporters nor any one else could hear all that was said by the speakers; consequently, it could not be reported accurate. Neither party was satisfied with the report; but he was a truthful man, and a faithful reporter, and although of strong party bias he would not cross a I or dot an i to please any party, nor, indeed, all parties, if he thought he would by so doing endanger the life of any one. This misunderstanding greatly disturbed Mr. CURRAN's mind, and soon afterwards his friends discovered that it was deranged, and sent him to the Insane Hospital at Mount Hope, near Baltimore, Maryland, where he so far recovered, as to be able to resume his place at the next session of Congress, and to perform his duties during the session, which was a short and quiet one.

At the commencement of this session he resumed his seat; but the idle struggle in organizing the House so excited him, as again, in some measure, to unhinge his mind, and we then withdrew him from it, and set him to making indexes for the Congressional Globe, which he could do in quiet.

When he was first employed by us as a printer, we paid him the usual price of a journeyman, then only ten dollars a week; but of this small sum he managed to send a large—perhaps the larger—portion to Baltimore to support his widowed mother and his three sisters, who resided there. He never married.

Seven years ago we raised his salary to twenty-five dollars a week the year round, though he was employed only about half his time on our business. We thought it both just to him and expedient for us to do so, because, in he were out of employment, some other person might obtain his services, and we could not do well without them. Soon after we raised his salary, he brought his mother and his three sisters to this city, and they commenced keeping house here. Two of his sisters died a few years ago of consumption. His mother and the youngest sister still survive; but they have how no means out of which to support themselves, his salary having all been consumed for that purpose as fast as received. He leaves a brother, R. R. CURRAN, a master joiner at the navy-yard in this city; but he is poor, and has a large family of his own to support, and, therefore, will not be able to render much assistance to his mother and sister.

Turkish Affairs—The Sultan.

LONDON, Thursday, July 3, 1856.

The Presse d'Orient contains a note from the Turkish Government, warning the public against the false reports continually in circulation. This has probably allusion to the rumors of a political crisis at Constantinople, and of struggles for power and place being likely to be more frequent and more violent than heretofore. It is certain that the Sultan has almost passed the limit at which he can be no longer held responsible for his actions. The life which this unhappy sovereign has led from boyhood has made him at 33 years of age, not only prematurely old in body, but almost prostrate in intellect. All energy of will is gone; how long understanding will remain is a question which no one can answer. He is entirely ruled by a race which it would be an insult even to Naples and Madrid to call a camarilla. He has his Kiz of rage, his hours of despondency. He changes his mind as often as those who surround him urge him to change it. Such is the sovereign who, at this time of danger and transition, governs the Turkish Empire, just saved from the grasp of a hostile potentate, and still occupied by the armies of two powerful allies. RUAD PASHA, the astonishing spirit of the present Ministry, hopes to retain power by working on the fears of the Sultan. Relying on the good will of the French, he wishes to prolong the French occupation; and to effect his purpose the disturbances caused by the concessions to the Christians are magnified, whilst future outbreaks are predicted. It is known that the Sultan inclines at present to RESCHID PASHA, who is supposed to rely on the good will of England.—Nat. Intelligencer.

Destructive Fire in Philadelphia.

From the Bulletin, July 31.

At a few minutes before 6 o'clock this morning a destructive fire occurred at No. 241 Broad street, near Wallace, through a simple and seemingly slight neglect. The watchman of the large saw and planing mill at that number had let the fire under the boiler in the lower story, and had gone up stairs to throw down some more shavings to feed the fire, through the hatchway used for the purpose. However, he forgot to shut the iron door of the engine-room, and as the shavings fell they came into the engine-room and took fire immediately. The flames soon spread, and in a short time the building was completely gutted, causing losses of about $10,000, as follows:

The building was of brick, three stories, 50 feet front on Broad street. It was owned by Rosser Arrison; loss between $5,000 and $6,000; insurance $3,000.

The first floor was occupied principally by the saw and planing mill of MARLIN & CO., who lost among other stock and materials, 150,000 feet of finished flooring. Their loss is $2,000; insurance $2,000. A. D. Hunt, mahogany scroll, saws, also occupied a portion of this floor. His loss is $500; no insurance.

Portions of the first and of the second floors were occupied by A. D. SHARPS, wood-molding manufacturer; his loss in stock and machinery is $2,500; no insurance. The remainder of the second story was occupied by J. S. D. NUNN, cash and blind makers; their losses are about $2,000 and $2,000; insurance $2,000.

C. LEECHMAN, turner, held a part of the third floor; his loss $200; no insurance. RICHARD PAR-

[illegible] NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NARRATIVE OF THE EXPEDITION OF AN AMERICAN SQUADRON TO THE CHINA SEAS AND JAPAN, performed in the years 1852, 1853, and 1854, under the command of Commodore M. C. PERRY, United States Navy, by order of the Government of the United States. 1 vol., imperial 8vo. New-York: D. APPLETON & CO.

The Japan Expedition, creditable to the nation and to those who undertook it, has found a suitable historian. The brief account supplied by BAYARD TAYLOR sufficed only to whet public curiosity, and Mr. SPALDING's book, though fuller in detail, was too superficial—too much in the flip-flap-and-jump style of narrative—to be satisfactory. The handsome volume before us, well-printed and richly illustrated with engravings and maps, contains Commodore PERRY's own full narrative, with the addition of important information supplied not only from journals kept by several of the officers under his command, but also from their official reports. From these abundant and thoroughly reliable sources of information, the present Narrative has been compiled, with care and tact, by command of the United States Government, and with unusual dispatch. The compilation, it is right to add, was mainly executed by Dr. HORNIE TOMES, although another name appears on the title-page. In plain words, fully five-sixths of the book has been the work of Dr. TOMES, whose labors are only slightly acknowledged in the nominal compiler's "Prefatory Notice."

To a large extent, this Narrative is given in Commodore PERRY's own words,—from the journal which he kept, noting the occurrences as they took place. The compilation passed under his inspection and received his correction before it went into the printers' hands, and each proof-sheet was carefully examined by him. In point of fact, therefore, the Narrative is nearly as much individualized as if Commodore PERRY had written every line of it. We have his matériel—his own words—and the result is a volume replete with important information, and possessing an interest, from its subject and execution, not inferior to that which, in the last century, was attached to the Narrative of Captain COOK's circumnavigation and maritime discoveries.

The Introduction, describing Japan and sketching its history, evidently has nothing Perryian in it. It is heavy, and too much spun out.

The Narrative itself is very pleasant reading on account of its plain and unambitious simplicity of diction. It is precisely such a series of details as might be expected from a well informed nautical Commander, who has seen a great deal of the world, who has sharp appreciation of character with close observation of circumstances, and, above all, who has a wholesome horror of that stilted style of composition yclept "high-falutin!" Rarely has a Narrative appeared so intelligible in all points. There can be no mistake, from first to last, as to the meaning of a single sentence. Every thing is definite and intelligible. The book has all the interest of romantic fiction combined with the effect of incidents of actual occurrence and great novelty. The reader rises from its perusal with very clear, accurate, and full notions of Japan, its rulers, people, laws, manners and customs. The story is plainly and fully told, and the telling is greatly assisted by numerous engravings, which considerably enhance the value as they increase the interest of the volume. Commodore PERRY has every reason to be satisfied with the manner in which his journals have been transfused, as it were, by Dr. TOMES, the able compiler of a work so important in its subject, and so full of interest to all who care for the advancement of civilization, by means of extended inter-national comity, alliance, and intercourse. The Expedition, though its primary object was to place Japan in commercial connection with the United States, really had a more catholic aim—namely, to admit all the world to the same advantages. The tact, sagacity, and prudence exercised by Commodore PERRY on this great mission cannot be too highly appreciated.

In connection with this Narrative, we have to notice a series of Graphic Scenes of the Japan Expedition, by WILLIAM HEINE, one of the artists who accompanied Commodore PERRY. This publication contains a portrait of the Commodore, (from a daguerreotype by HAAS, the eminent photographer,) with nine views of places. These, in uniform semi-folio size, are executed in colors and tints by SARONY, and are published by Mr. G. P. PUTNAM. The accompanying letter-press is appropriate, explicit, and sufficient. It includes a biography of Commodore PERRY, and descriptions of the different places represented in the Sketches. The views represent places in China, Lew Chew and Japan, and are admirably executed. Chromo-lithography is well adapted to the purpose of exhibiting the curiosities and varieties of strange scenery, architecture, and costume. The very title-page of this collection of engravings is good. These Graphic Scenes suitably illustrate the Narrative of the Japan Expedition.

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN. By the Author of "The Head of the Family," "The Ogilvies," &c. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS.

DINAH MARIA MULOCK has written several novels, of which the present is by far the best. It is very different from The Ogilvies, her first work of any importance, which, in its leading incidents, (of a married woman's being prevented from voluntary shame only by an accident to her lover,) very nearly bordered on the indelicate. In the work before us, though an unfaithful wife is introduced, (very needlessly, as her crime scarcely influences the action of the story,) Miss MULOCK is much more careful. We pay her no small compliment in saying that John Halifax might almost be mistaken for a domestic romance by Mrs. MARSH, the best, by many degrees, of living female novelists. It is, in fact, the story of an English family, the head of which, commencing life in the lowliest condition, achieves station and wealth. The time of the novel is from the closing years of the last century to 1834, and a good many political notices are introduced. In these, as well as in some other points, Miss MULOCK makes many mistakes;—one curious one is in her treatment of a contested Parliamentary election, where she converts the High Sheriff of the county into the Returning Officer for a borough, and actually has the polling to take place in the parish church, (with the extraordinary declaration that doing so was "A not uncommon usage in country boroughs,") while Lord LUXMOORE, who is a peer of the realm, dared not commit such a "breach of privilege" as to be even present at an election, is introduced as personally taking part in the proceedings! This comes of young women writing about things on which they are wholly misinformed.

The character of John Halifax, as well as of Ursula, his wife, is delicately sketched—not from Nature, however. The gentleman, in particular, is one of those "faultless monsters whom the world ne'er saw." He is far too good for every-day life. Nevertheless, the book is well written, and is a great deal better, in some respects, than two-thirds of the ordinary romances which it is our hard (critical) necessity to read. There is one very beautiful creation in the book—a girl, born blind, who dies before she has budded into womanhood.

MEMORIALS OF HIS TIME. By HENRY COCKBURN. 1 vol., small 8vo. New-York: Appletons.

HENRY COCKBURN, a Scottish lawyer, who was one of the Lords of Session, (i. e. a Judge of the Superior Court at Edinburg,) is known to American readers as author of a rather dull biography of FRANCIS JEFFREY, for many years the eminent Editor of the Edinburg Review. The book before us, (the memoir of Jeffrey,) is a description of this town, and pleasant enough, as a literary work. Francis Jeffrey, as a literary critic, was a very [illegible] in this town, long before the rise of the Edinburg Review, and published a volume of poems, which, though

Duelling at Washington.

In another column we copy an article from the Boston Traveller, upon the recent personal controversy between Mr. BURLINGAME and Mr. BROOKS. We reprint it as an illustration of the kind treasure Northern constituencies are in the habit of dealing out to their representatives in Congress, and for the purpose of remarking upon what we deem its gross injustice to one who has stood up boldly and manfully, against the attempts of the South to suppress and prevent free speech on the part of Northern men by personal intimidation. Mr. BURLINGAME, it seems, made up his mind to say openly and fully just what he thought of the assault of Mr. BROOKS upon Mr. SUMNER—and, at the same time, to accept the challenge of Mr. BROOKS or of any other gentleman who might feel aggrieved thereby. The Traveller apparently commends him for his bold plainness of speech;—while it condemns him for his willingness to fight a duel. But it condemns, with far greater severity, the alleged want of courage which he exhibited in stating to the friends of Mr. BROOKS that his epithets of censure were applied to his acts, and not to his personal character. "This," says the Traveller, "so lessened the force of his 'bold words,' as to reduce them to a mere figure of speech, or careless declamation;" and it proceeds, with stinging sarcasm, to represent Mr. BURLINGAME as impliedly saying to Mr. BROOKS that he "hoped the sweet savor of their friendship would not be disturbed by the very disagreeable smell of gunpowder." All this, we presume, will be set right by Mr. BURLINGAME's card, withdrawing the explanation which is thus represented as having been an abandonment of his position. He leaves the Traveller no longer any pretext for taunting him with an unwillingness to meet the responsibility for his speech; but he has probably again exposed himself to its censure for declaring his readiness, if called on, to fight a duel. In either event he is to be condemned:—in the one case for cowardice, and in the other for fighting. And this is the dilemma in which Northern members of Congress are very apt to find themselves. It seems to us in the last degree unjust and unreasonable;—and calculated to place Northern men at a great disadvantage in their endeavors to resist the aggressions and meet the insults of the champions of Slavery. It is asking too much of any man, to demand that he shall be vehement, bold and unsparing in his speech, and that he shall then submit to the reproach, either of being a duellist for meeting the responsibility of it in the mode prescribed by those he has insulted, or of cowardice for not doing so.

It is said, we know, that the true mode is to decline engaging in a duel, but to declare one's readiness to resist assault. The Traveller impliedly takes this ground in its commendations of Mr. WILSON's course, as contrasted with that of Mr. BURLINGAME. But this only changes the form,—not the principle of the matter. A street fight is a duel;—and that, too, in the worst possible form. It gives the assailant choice of time, place, weapons, and every possible advantage. The assailed, if he resists, does it almost with the certainty of losing his life. The duel, barbarous as it may be, is a more civilized institution than street-fighting. It was invented to supersede it, and to give to the personal rencontres which passion will always provoke, the equality and fairness which are essential possible. There is much which may be said in the following remarks of Col. BURTON upon this subject, given in his Thirty Years' View, by way of comment upon the anti-dueling act passed in 1839, after the death of CLAY:

"Still, this deplorable practice is not as bad as the bowie-knife, and the revolver, and their attendant accompaniments, shooting for blood. In the duel there is at least consent on both sides, with a preliminary opportunity for settlement, with a chance for the law to arrest them and room for the interposition of friends to the affair going on. There is usually equality of terms; and it would not be called an affair of honor, if honor was not to prevail all round; and if the satisfying a point of honor, and not vengeance, was not the end to be attained. Finally, in the regular duel, the principals are in the hands of seconds, (for no man can be made a second without his consent,) and as both these are required by the dueling code, (for the sake of fairness and humanity,) to be free from ill will or grudge towards the adversary principal, they are expected to terminate the affair as soon as the point of honor is satisfied—and the less the injury so much the better. The only exception to these rules is, where the principals are in such relation to each other as to admit of no accommodation, and the injury such as to admit of no compromise. In the knife and revolver business, all this is different. There is no preliminary interval for settlement—no chance for officers of justice to intervene—no room for friends to interpose. Instead of equality of terms, every advantage is sought. Instead of consent, the victim is set upon at the most unguarded moment. Instead of satisfying a point of honor, it is vengeance to be glutted. Nor does the difference stop with death. In the duel, the unhurt principal scorns to continue the combat upon his disabled adversary: in the knife and revolver case the hero of these weapons continues firing and stabbing while the prostrate body of the dying man gives a sign of life. In the duel the survivor never assails the character of the fallen: in the knife and revolver case the first movement of the victor is to attack the character of his victim—to assume him of an intent to murder, and to make out a case of self-defence, by making out a case of premeditated attack against the other, and in such false accusation the French proverb is usually verified—the dead and the absent are always in the wrong."

No one can vindicate dueling, nor would we say a syllable in its favor, except as compared with street-fighting and assassination. It is preferable to either:—and if Southern Members of Congress maintain their determination to punish by force what they consider insulting to themselves or their States, we prefer that Northern men should meet them in the duel rather than fall their victims while unarmed, or while at such a disadvantage that successful resistance is impossible. One of two things, in our judgment, Northern men should do:—either abstain entirely from the use of insulting and offensive language, or else indulge in its use with a determination to meet the issue it may provoke. Either course may be pursued consistently with honor and self-respect. If principle and conscience demand abstinence from dueling, their demands are equally imperative, and should be equally enforced, for abstinence from the language that provokes a challenge. If Northern papers and Northern constituencies exact the one, they should concede the other also.

Naval Apprentices.

Among the Monsieur Tonsons of Congress there is no one so persevering in coming again, as the inevitable bill compelling owners and masters of vessels to take a certain number of apprentices to each ship belonging to the United States, in proportion to its tonnage. This bill has been again introduced by Mr. PELTON, of the Third Congressional District of this State. We have not seen a copy of Mr. PELTON's bill, but presume it is similar to the other bills that have been brought forward for the same purpose. The object of the Apprenticeship bill is to create seamen, so that our mercantile marine may not suffer from a lack of competent men to man our ships. The object is, undoubtedly, a most praiseworthy one, for the race of seamen appears to be nearly extinct; but, whether the means proposed to regenerate the race, is likely to answer the purpose is another matter. For our own part, we do not think it is, and that, if the Apprenticeship bill were passed, it would be impossible to enforce it. It would be hardly less oppressive and unjust than the impressment system which was in force in England during the Napoleonic wars, and instead of proving in any way beneficial it could not fail to be most embarrassing to our ship-owners.

Desirable as it may be that a better class of seamen should be created, both for our merchant and national vessels, we do not believe in the possibility of their creation on compulsion. It would be about as sensible and just to attempt to compel our merchants to take a certain number of apprentices in their counting-rooms, or to require farmers or mechanics to employ so many boys, in proportion to their business, as to attempt to enforce such a law in relation to ships. The only way to induce boys to become sailors is to offer them better pay than they can get in other professions. Boys have a natural tendency to run away and go to sea; they take to the water instinctively, like young ducks, and there would be no difficulty in our ship-owners filling their vessels with young adventurers, if they were found to be profitable. But they are not, and if they were, there would still be lacking the necessary stimulus to tempt them to continue the life of a sailor after the duties of a seaman had been learned. If the present method of officering our Navy were abandoned, and promotion from the ranks were made dependent upon personal merit, there would be no lack of seamen for our naval ships or for our mercantile marine. No law is necessary to create blacksmiths, book-keepers, lawyers, canal boatmen, or clergymen. The natural law of demand and supply saves all the trouble of legislation in these cases, as it ought to do in the case of seamen, if there were not disturbing causes to prevent. Of all the professions, the one which is the most overstocked is that of the law, and the reason of it is that it offers the most tempting prizes to those who enter it—not in money, but in honor. Nine-tenths of our public men, our Presidents, Governors, Senators, and foreign Ambassadors, are taken from this favored profession. There are always more good lawyers than can gain employment, while there is always a scarcity of good seamen. Let Mr. PELTON, therefore, withdraw his bill for creating seamen by compelling ship-owners to take apprentices in their ships, and substitute in its place one giving greater inducements for men to go to sea.

Southern Propositions.

Few things in political history are more striking than the apparent change in public sentiment, in regard to the extinction of Slavery into free territory of the United States. We venture to say that previous to the Mexican war, not half a dozen prominent Democrats can be named, in all of the Free States put together, who were not what would now be called Free Soilers. FRANCIS, CASS, DICKINSON, the VAN BURENS, FRANCIS KING, CAMPBELLITES, and hosts of others—since ensnared—uttered language, in 1846, 7, 8 and 9, which would be denounced as "Abolitionism" by the demagogues of the Cincinnati platform. Excepting Iowa, the Legislatures of all of the Northern States, the majority of which were Democratic, passed resolutions in favor of the Wilmot Proviso.

The same thing was true to a less extent of the Southern States. With the exception of Mr. CALHOUN and his party, which then did not compose a majority in more than two of the Southern States, the great mass of the Southern people were ready to concede to Congress the power of excluding Slavery from Federal Territory. And it is scarcely too much to say that, previous to the Annexation of Texas, it only needed an energetic rally, in Kentucky, Maryland, Tennessee, Missouri, and even Virginia, to render effectively triumphant in those States the doctrine of WASHINGTON, JEFFERSON, PATRICK HENRY, MADISON, and the RANDOLPHS, that "Slavery is a great social evil, which should be gradually but certainly eradicated; that it is a relation fatal to industry, false to economy, injurious to morals, dangerous to liberty, and retaliating upon the masters the wrongs of its more immediate victims." This thinking population of the South, which was formerly opposed to Slavery in the abstract, and longed for its extinction—what has become of it? Is the boast true that it has suddenly become, within ten years, bound hand and foot to demagogism in the North, given up its individuality, and been moulded by sajolery and deceit to sell its birthright for a phantom?

We have very little doubt that a large portion of the people of the Southern States still adhere to the doctrines of the founders of the Republic concerning Slavery, and that, if the absolute control exercised over their action by political leaders could be relaxed—if the clamor of the ambitious and the reckless among them could be silenced, and voices from the mighty Past could be made for a while to stir the popular heart at the South, the word "sectionalism" would soon be forgotten, and present bitterness be merged in universal recurrence to those bases of union around which the whole country was once contented to rally. The FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY was a Southerner and a Slaveholder. If he were alive now, Senator TOOMBS, the Charleston Mercury clique and id genus omne would denounce him as an Abolitionist traitor! In a letter to ROBERT MORRIS, GEORGE WASHINGTON wrote:

"I can only say there is not a man living who wishes more sincerely than I do to see a plan adopted for the abolition of it (Slavery.) But there is only one proper and effectual mode by which it can be accomplished, and that is by the legislative authority, and this, so far as my suffrage will go, shall not be wanting."

The corner stone of the platform erected by the Old Continental Congress in 1787, around which the Democracy of the country rallied for sixty years, was laid by THOMAS JEFFERSON in 1784. Immediately after the cession, by Virginia, of her territory northwest of the Ohio, to the Confederation, a Committee was appointed in the old Congress, and JEFFERSON, CHASE, and HOWELL reported the following resolution:

"That after the year 1800 of the Christian era, there shall be neither Slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of the said States, otherwise than in punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted to have been personally guilty."

This was the origin of the famous ordinance, passed on the 13th July, 1787, for the government of that territory—an offshoot from a slaveholding State—the 6th article of which commences as follows: "There shall be neither Slavery nor involuntary servitude in said Territory." On the passage of that ordinance, every State, at that time represented in the old Congress, voted in the affirmative. All the Southern States represented voted unanimously that there should be neither Slavery nor involuntary servitude in the Northwestern Territory. Such were then the patriotic principles of Virginia: such the Democracy of the Old Dominion! South Carolina, too, now in the van with her new and extraordinary doctrines, voted for the ordinance of 1787, and for the Slavery limitation platform of THOMAS JEFFERSON.

PATRICK HENRY, a magnanimous Southern Slaveholder and Statesman, said: "I believe a time will come when an opportunity will be offered to abolish this lamentable evil. Every thing we can do is to improve it, if it happens in our day; if not, let us transmit to our descendants, together with our slaves, pity for their unhappy lot, and our abhorrence of Slavery." Mr. MADISON, another Slaveholder, called Slavery "a traffic which has long and loudly upbraided the barbarism of modern policy." Mr. MONROE said: "We have found that this evil has preyed upon the very vitals of the Union, and has been prejudicial to all the States in which it has existed." GEORGE MASON, also of Virginia, did not hesitate to say, in the Virginia Convention: "The Slave trade was one of the great causes of our separation from Great Britain. Its exclusion has been a principal object of this State, and of most of the States of the Union. As much as I value the Union of the States, I would not admit the Southern States into this Union, unless they agreed to the discontinuance of this disgraceful trade, because it would bring weakness and not strength into the Union."

It was under the prevalence of such a feeling (for it would be easy to multiply, indefinitely, extracts from the speeches and writings of Southern Statesmen) that the Union of the Federal States was consummated. And it must be by the restoration of such sentiments, that it will be preserved. The effort of the public men of the South is now, and for many years has been, to make the perpetuation and aggrandizement of Slavery the great end and aim of Federal and State legislation. Thus far they have had with marked success. If they continue to go on in the path they are now traveling, they may accomplish the object which they seek,—a dissolution of the Union and the formation of a new Confederacy on the basis of Slavery. If the people of the South shall break the bonds in which they are held, and return to the principles and the policy of their early statesmen, they will perpetuate the Union which they established and secure for themselves and their posterity the objects for which it was designed.

They Won't Surrender their Charter.

We publish elsewhere in this morning's TIMES the reply of Hon. E. D. SPERRY to Messrs. ELLSWORTH and SHERMAN, who, under cover of an alleged authority from Mr. E. B. BARTLETT, of Conn., President of the Pro-Slavery Know-Nothing Council, demand the Charter of the American State Council, of the State of Connecticut. It will be remembered by those who read our report of the proceedings of the State Council which met at Hartford a few days ago, that what was said to be a letter from Mr. BARTLETT, revoking their Charter, was read there amid the laughter of the members, a proceeding which at that time conveyed the impression that while Mr. BARTLETT was doubtless much respected as a man, his authority as President of the Pro-Slavery Council, over the Americans of Connecticut, was not greatly reverenced by them. Mr. SPERRY, as President of the Council, does not recognize in Mr. BARTLETT the power to revoke the Charter, and while stating his determination not to surrender it, takes occasion to refresh the memory of Mr. SHERMAN on the subject of his former declarations in favor of the principles of the Republicans and North Americans.

The American Bible Union—Letter of Dr. Maclay.

In another part of this morning's paper we publish in full the letter of Rev. Dr. MACLAY, in regard to his resignation of the Presidency of the American Bible Union, and to the prosecution under the auspices of that Society, of the work of making a new English Version of the Bible. We give it at length, on account of the interest which the subject has excited in the religious community, and the importance of the issues which it makes. We published a day or two since a general denial on the part of the officers of the Society, of the justice of its strictures:—but this has only increased the general desire to know precisely what its charges are. The general reputation of Dr. MACLAY, and especially the position he has so long held in relation to this undertaking, give to his statements concerning it very great authority and consideration. He is specific and definite in his allegations, and renders it easy for the officers of the Society to meet them with contradictory proof if such proof is accessible. It is, of course, no part of our purpose to express any opinion as to the justice of the charges or the merits of the institution whose management is thus assailed:—but only to place before the public in an authentic form the statements made, under his own signature and upon his own responsibility, by one who has enjoyed its confidence and possessed unusual facilities for being accurately informed of the manner in which its affairs are conducted.

How England is Governed.

It is singular and strange that, notwithstanding the melancholy fiasco of the British aristocracy in the East, and the scorn and derision which the incompetency of the governing class provoked, equally among allies and foes, England sits cold, and still under the upas shade, which went well nigh to destroy her. She continues still a nation of lions led by asses. Her governors are born—not made. Here, in this country, circumstances may throw a man of unhappy incompetence, like PIERCE, to the surface. But we are not troubled with PIERCE's cousin, and PIERCE's uncle, and the little PIERCES, and so forth. The whole Government was not rocked in the same cradle, nor took candle out of the same bowl.

In England, however, "Her Majesty's Ministers," of whatever individual color or policy, claim the poet's prerogative, and are born—not made. This rule may hold good in the golden regions of fancy, but in the stern matter-of-fact world we work and live in, it is not a just or a safe principle to prevail in the government of a great country. What would become of STUART's great establishment if all the hands in his business were STUART's hands? or of any of our great theatrical houses—for all the world's a stage—if all the actors were to be uncles or cousins of WALLACK, or BURTON, or Miss LAURA KEENE, without regard to particular capacity or fitness? Yet so is it with the Government of England. If regularly run through, they would constitute a new first chapter of Mathew. Thus Lord GRANVILLE, the President of the Council, is cousin to Lord HARROWBY, Lord Privy Seal, who is cousin to the Duke of ARGYLE, Post-Master General, who is nephew of Lord CARLISLE, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, who is brother-in-law of Mr. LABOUCHERE, Secretary for the Colonies, who is cousin of Sir C. WOOD, First Lord of the Admiralty, whose wife is cousin of Sir GEORGE GREY, Secretary for the Home Department. Then comes Lord CLARENDON, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, whose brother CHARLES PELHAM VILLIERS is Judge-Advocate-General, and brother-in-law Sir GEORGE CORNWALLIS LEWIS is Chancellor of the Exchequer, and so on to the end of the chapter. With the exception of Lord PANMURE, Minister of War, and Lord PALMERSTON himself, whose marriage with Lord MELBOURNE's sister carried him into the Whig circle, the present Ministry of England may be said to constitute as neat a little family party as could be found.

If this pleasant gathering was, to-morrow, disturbed and scattered by the spell of an untoward division, the party who come in when they "go out" would be but little better. Actually the Whigs are more clannish and exclusive than the Tories. The principle of the one has been to govern on liberal principles through aristocratic men; with the other, to govern on aristocratic principles through people-born men. Thus we see that, while SUMNER and BROOKS, who were the bare and Connecticut cousins of the Whig temple, were never raised beyond a subordinate position, PEEL and CANNING, and PEEL and DISRAELI took the lead of the Tory ranks. These, however, are exceptions born, in necessity. As a rule the members, scions, connections, or protegés of a few governing families, on one side or the other, monopolize all the important and influential posts in the public service. Parties fight constantly and conquer alternately. The Whigs go out and the Tories come in. But whether one faction or the other predominate, Ministers are only to be found among the members of a small exclusive corporation, numbering some one thousand persons out of a population of thirty millions, into which no one, who does not wield the wedge of a giant intellect, can force his way. Could the Tory Party in England now, out of the whole Aristocracy, find a man even moderately capable of leading them, they would not follow for an hour DISRAELI's plume. But he is the solitary fire that lights up thier camp of dullness.

Monstrous as this system seems, the English people are so essentially wedded to aristocracy, and John Bull seems so dearly to love a lord, that they only hug and cherish it the more closely after every fiasco and every fall. Poor big foolish lambs, they even lick the hand that leads them on to death. Every effort to inaugurate a change comes to an untimely end, and until some fiasco of a still ruder and darker form than has yet befallen brings broad ruin on the land, Englishmen will not touch a stone of this sacred governing system. DICKENS has heaped on it a whole battery of ridicule; Lowes and Layards have struck with stern hand at its walls, but it has always ended in their sneaking into some small subordinate place within its gates.

Again we see Mr. ROEBUCK by our last accounts endeavoring to provide a remedy for this evil. But his fate seems even worse. He could not gather round him even an audience of listeners, much less workers. The truth is, that while aristocracy lasts in England, aristocracy will govern. The system is to be altered, the whole temple of the Constitution of England must be swept down. The tempest which will strike that blow must be a strong one. And there is not now in the air even the faint drop that often gives long warning of its approach.

Our First Statue.

Nearly a hundred years ago, when all the country above Wall-street was a rural district, the traveler through the streets of New-York might have seen two statues which belonged to the public. One of them was an effigy of his most gracious Majesty King GEORGE the III. It stood in Bowling Green, and was most appropriately made of lead. The other was a marble statute of the Great Earl of CHATHAM, which stood on its pedestal at the head of Wall-street, in Broadway. But, our iconoclastic ancestors at the breaking out of the Revolution, toppled down these effigies of a King and his Prime Minister, and for more than eighty years New-York remained without the ornament of a statue in any of its streets. But, the era of public statuary has returned upon us, and the iconoclastic period has passed. Republican New-York can now boast of its first statue. Those who pass through Union-place, or who saunter in that locality, may see, even in a dark night, a solitary horseman bestride his brazen steed, with his gigantic hand stretched out towards the unfinished tower of the church o the Puritans, as though he were commanding that imperfect work to be completed. The colossal equestrian looms up grandly on its granite pedestal and imparts a classic air to the neighborhood.

Our first statue is, altogether, an admirable work of its kind, and is very properly erected in honor of him who is first in the hearts of his countrymen. Thus it is well located, both as regards the name of the place and the place itself. It is a contribution to the City, too, by some of its great merchants; and this act of their liberality will prove an incentive to others to follow their example. It was a noble act of patronage to one of our native sculptors, and the whole work has been free from any of those jobbing and partisan acts which taint almost everything for which the public pay. We are not sure that any city of the Old world can boast of a more noble work of the kind; we are sure that no city of the New can.

Having been so happy in our first statue, there is good reason for hoping that we shall be equally fortunate in our future attempts to add to the ornaments of the City, and do honor to the distinguished men of our State and country, while we honor ourselves in showing that we appreciate their virtues, and are grateful for their services. Let our next statue be in commemoration of a New-Yorker. There will be no harm in introducing the element of Know-Nothingism in our public statues. It would not look well to see our City filled with statuary and monuments in honor of strangers, while the illustrious natives of our own State are unhonored.

The Common Council have made a small appropriation for a storied cenotaph in memory of General WOOTEN, to be erected on the small gore of ground between Twenty-third-street and Madison-square; and steps were taken a few years since towards erecting a statue in honor of FENIMORE COOPER, by a few literary gentlemen. These are all the attempts, even, which have been made towards beautifying the City with statuary, though we have an indistinct recollection of a Committee having been chosen to raise funds for a statue of DE WITT CLINTON, and after the last defeat of HENRY CLAY there was an association formed for the purpose of erecting a monument in honor of that great statesman, of which WILLIAM B. ASTOR was the Chairman. There has also been a New-York Washington Monument Association in existence some thirty years but we are not aware that anything has been done beyond calling meetings and passing resolutions.

But, the public-spirited gentlemen who subscribed the requisite funds for our first statue have painted the work, and shown how easily and inexpensively a thing of this kind may be done, and it cannot be long before their example will be followed. When public meetings of New-Yorkers are called to do honor to the memory of DE WITT CLINTON very naturally suggest themselves. It is a reproach to the City which has been so greatly enriched by his public services, that it contains no adequate recognition of the debt due him. But there is one other name which has claims upon the Knickerbockers, which ought to be recognized. The last Dutch Governor of New-York should have a statue in the City which he governed so well, and where so many of his descendants still reside, and the square which is called after his name would be a most appropriate location for one. Statues of the first Republican Governor of the State, and of the first Mayor of the City after its evacuation by British troops, would also be appropriate subjects for our public places. And then would come a long list of illustrious names, from which selections might be made of proper subjects for such honors. Once let the fashion be commenced of public subscriptions for such objects, and our stations and monuments would increase and multiply art would flourish, and the City would be enriched and beautified.

Our Gold Coming Back.

The Pennsylvanian furnishes the following piece of startling news, from which it would appear that the British Lion is about to descend upon us as Jupiter did upon Danae, in a shower of gold:

"A gentleman, who has just returned from Europe, states that the British Government stands ready to contribute one hundred thousand pounds sterling to aid in electing the sectional candidate for the Presidency, as a prelude to the dissolution of the Union. British gold has been contributed freely for years to aid in keeping up the Abolition excitement and sectional strife, and now the British Government itself is about to take the field against the American Democracy."

We cannot say, as the terrified Macbeth said to the ghost of Banquo, "take any shape but that," for we don't know a more agreeable one that our relative across the Atlantic could assume. We have been sending so many millions of gold to England lately, that we should say it was about time for the golden tide to set this way. But, if this startling intelligence were furnished by any less respectable authority than the official organ of Mr. BUCHANAN, we should think it was too good to be true. What particular benefit the British Government expects to reap from the success of the "sectional candidate," whoever he may be, we are at a loss to imagine. But then it must be confessed that a good many of the acts of the British Government are quite as unfathomable to us unsophisticated Republicans.

Bogus Fillmore Meeting.

The Express published a letter the other day purporting to be written at Glenville, in Connecticut, and giving an account of a tremendously enthusiastic Fillmore and Donelson ratification meeting in that town. But no such meeting has ever been held there, nor any Fillmore gathering or ratification meeting of any kind. The account of the meeting was signed "Jacob Jones, Esq." But there is no person of that name living in the town.

The portraits of FILLMORE and DONELSON, the candidates of Whigdom and American, those of FREMONT and DAYTON on Thursday, and those of BUCHANAN and BRECKINRIDGE on Friday.
An exact account will be kept of the number of extra copies called for on each of these three days, and announced in The Sun of Saturday morning. This will be a political test of popularity and influence of the candidates and real interest taken by those connected with the different parties in "spreading the documents."
"The Humbugs are—all of them—pronounced the best that have yet been received on wood."
THE ENGRAVINGS COST OVER $150.
The production of these splendid portraits is not the only feature of interest in the columns of The Sun. A new and original story, written expressly for The New-York Sun by DONALD MCLEOD, entitled,
THE OLD HOUSE;
How it Enlarged and Who Lived in it Afterwards, will also be published in The Sun on the same days that the portraits appear.
To set all these portraits and this very interesting story, have the paper left at your house or place of business. It costs only sixpence a week—single copies one cent each.

GOOD, BEGINNING!—The initiative and co-operations are hardly less numerous and as energetic as the pens of our friends in the book-trade, who, not content with publishing the books as now, by conveniently fitting the title, or by inserting that a chapter of a week's life, pass off the whole as the only complete one that is or will be, have the complacence to use our own advertisements either in whole or part, without so much as "by your leave."
Mr. Bonner presents his compliments to Messrs. Dapper & Jackson, the well-known publishers, who inserted the above in yesterday's Tribune, and begs to thank them for the notice that they have seen fit to take of his poor, paltry, contented imitators; still, Mr. Bonner advises in imitation, that he is supposed to "hitting" anybody. The unfortunate creatures who have had the audacity to attempt to steal a portion of his popularity have for a long time struggled to obtain a foothold on their own merits, and failing in them, they cannot be blamed, perhaps, if they exhibit a laudable ambition to clutch on the mantle of HONEST Jones. Still—Mr. Bonner thinks Messrs. Dapper & Jackson for the good feeling that they have exhibited towards him. They have demonstrated the fact that they have the courage, the manliness and the magnanimity to "speak out" against a great wrong, even where they are not interested themselves.

The Broadway Murder—The Murderer Not yet Secured—Examination of the Coroner's Jurors—Other Mysteries.

The much-talked-of murder of Burke, the porter, in Broadway, on Thursday night last, still continues to be a topic of universal remark.

Not the slightest other effort has been made to find the murderer has not yet been arrested; still there is great reason for believing that the villain will yet be caught, and made to suffer the penalty he so justly merits.

From all circumstances known, it appears probable that he was in the room with deceased by the name of "Bill," who drinkers call "the straw hat," who was last seen with Burke on the night of the murder, and who took from the saloon, beneath a large cheese-knife.

THE INQUEST RESUMED.

Yesterday nothing additional of importance. The following facts are about as follows:

Thomas Burke, resident at No. 4 Dey-street, deceased, the murdered man, aged—Well known deceased ten or twelve years. Saw him last the Wednesday night before he was murdered; met him at the corner of Elm and White streets, about eight o'clock in the evening, drinking at the bar with the owner of the place, the bar keeper, and a strange man. Advised him not to get so drinking again. Accompanied him to Mr. Joyce's store, and thence through Broadway to Pearl-street, and left him. Deceased told him that Reilos was his best friend, and his family were kind to him. Witness knew the silver watch, gold chain, ring and pocket-handkerchief belonging to deceased, which it is supposed the assassin has taken, and was sure he could identify them.

Mr. Fisher, foreman of Mr. Joyce's store, testified that he was in the room with deceased on the Wednesday evening preceding the murder, between six and seven o'clock, and remonstrated with him in regard to losing his watch, keeping bad company, &c; had often talked with him before; had never known Reilos to be in the store after evening; left M. and was sure that on that evening Reilos was not in the store; saw deceased on Tuesday, about half-past seven o'clock, for the last time; never knew that deceased had an enemy in the world; he was then perfectly sober. Witness stated that deceased changed his boarding place not long since, and told him he had done so on account of having some words with a young man, but that he was going back again, as the young man had apologized.

Dr. Freeman D. Hudson, whose office was at No. 810 Broadway, in the same floor with Mr. Joyce's store, testified that deceased came into his back room after water on Tuesday, perhaps half-a-dozen times; deceased was a very pleasant man; often conversed with him about his habits; once induced him to take the pledge, but he would occasionally have a spree; sometimes prescribed for him when he was recovering from one, and was almost in a state of delirium tremens; witness related the circumstances of the finding of Burke's body, on Friday morning, as corroborating the testimony of preceding witnesses; his first impression was that the man had committed suicide, but further investigation convinced him that a horrid murder had been committed, but who was the perpetrator was to him, as to others, a mystery.

Jacob Barkeeper of the saloon under Mr. Joyce's place, was further examined: Closed the saloon about twelve o'clock on the night of the murder; went up and sat on the steps about ten minutes, then went back again and went to bed; sleep in the saloon; was not seen in White-street that night; the strange man in the drab coat and straw hat before the knife was missed; the next day two young men, apparently Americans, who were in the saloon that night, came in again; witness told them the strange man who was so saucy to him had stolen the knife; one of them replied, "Yes, Dear John put something inside the waist of his coat." The knife was between or sixteen inches long, with a sharp point, and two edges, and handle of about equal length. Took supper that night about seven o'clock; in White-street, staid perhaps three quarters of an hour; received no message from deceased that night.

THE CORONER'S JURY.

Here, the evidence being concluded, the case was given to the Coroner's Jury at considerable length. He thanked the Jury for their patient and thorough investigation, and regretted that the inquisition had not resulted more successfully—that it had not resulted in a full identification of the perpetrator of the most foul and cold-blooded murder ever perpetrated in the great metropolis of the United States. He trusted that the vigilance of the proper authorities would not cease on the conclusion of the inquisition, but that every effort would be made to unravel the dreadful mystery in which the affair was now involved.

He thanked Chief Kip Hence, the Mayor, would, by the advice contained in his offer of a reward for the detection of the guilty party, and that our wealthy and liberal citizens would second such an effort. Patient, active and courage had so much extended, that it behoved every good citizen to unite in at least assisting the guilty to justice. Individual safety and the good of community demanded this. In conclusion he thanked Capt. Dowling and the officers and patrolmen of the Sixth Police District for their untiring and praiseworthy efforts, and then dismissed the Jury for consultation.

After a brief deliberation, the Jury returned the following verdict: "That Bartholomew Burke was wrongfully murdered on the night of Thursday, the 17th day of July, 1856, by some person or persons unknown to the Jury."

THE ALLEGED BIGAMY.

The examination into the charge of bigamy preferred against Alonzo W. Adams, was commenced yesterday, before Justice Davidson, at the Jefferson Market Police Court.

Mrs. Hannah Maria Post, of Jersey City, the complainant, was examined, but her evidence presented nothing additional to that given in her affidavit.

Mr. Stanton, of Tennessee, who appeared as counsel for the defence was examined, as to his knowledge as to his acquaintance with Mr. Adams, &c., and was, at the adjournment of the Court, still under examination.

WITH IN DIFFICULTY—WHERE HE OUGHT'T TO BE.

Mr. Smith is an unfortunate fellow. He is never out of difficulty. He is at the Tombs every day telling his grievance—how some loafer jammed him, or how some woman wronged him by wringing his wrist. But still Mr. Smith will never learn. He is everywhere but where he ought to be—constantly losing chances the precious, going in cheap. He is destitute of taste and indifferent to smell. Church and Water streets are his favorite haunts—Mercer-street is too high—up town.

Mr. Smith is a teamsterian, indefatigably and decidedly. He had a gold watch worth $20 and $15 in money, on Monday night. On Tuesday morning he had neither one nor t'other—he the accompanied a lone young woman to a house in the Fourth Ward. So, as he couldn't get any breakfast, he went to Justice Osborne and asked for justice. A warrant for the arrest of one Mary Dampster was issued at his request, and then he left to call again to-day. Mr. Smith! Mister Smith!

Miscellaneous.

POLICE APPOINTMENTS.

We understand that a number of police appointments were made yesterday. The officials about the Mayor's office "know nothing" about the matter. We have been able to learn one thing, however—viz.: that the new appointees are "all right on the goose question," and will not forsake the regular nominations.

GAS EXPLOSION.

On Monday evening the gas meter at No. 68 Delancy-street exploded, severely burning a Mr. Keim about the face and arms. Fortunately, no one but Mr. Keim was in the room at the time of the accident.

DEATH FROM BURNS.

Coroner Gamble held an inquest yesterday at No. 436 Seventh-avenue upon the body of Wm. Smith, a boy of 15 years, who came to his death from burns accidentally received while in the act of filling a fluid lamp on the 16th instant. Verdict in accordance with the above facts.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

Mr. Alexander, residing at No. 211 Hudson-street, was knocked down and run over by a runaway horse, attached to a wagon, at the foot of Bedfordstreet, on Tuesday evening. He was taken to his home terribly injured, and died last evening. Deceased was 45 years of age. He was a married man. He leaves behind a wife and family.

The runaway horse belongs to E. Bell, wood merchant, on the foot of Vestry-street, and was driven by a man named Doyle, who was intoxicated at the time of the fatal occurrence.

A man named Thomas G. Smith, residing at No. 20 Chrystie-street, had a quarrel on Monday with one John Hamill, who is supposed to be insane. John had possessed himself of a pistol, and fired at Smith, inflicting a very dangerous wound in the neck. Smith was sent to the Hospital, and John was locked up in the Tombs.

Horrible Affair in East Newark—A Wife Shot—Suicide of the Husband.

From the Newark Mercury, July 19.

About 7 o'clock last evening, a German residing in East Newark, and in the employ of Messrs. Guaswez & Co., who had been actively engaged at the fire yesterday afternoon, loaded a musket and fired the contents at his wife, who was sitting outside of the door, sewing. The charge, which was wadding merely, took effect upon the upper part of the left arm, entirely destroying it. Seeing her fall from her chair, and supposing he had killed her, he entered the house, and bolting the door after him, reloaded his musket, attached a string to the trigger, and placing the muzzle to his breast, passed instantly into eternity.

We learn that this man has been remarkable for a considerable period for his strange behavior in frequently firing his musket at night to the annoyance of his neighbors, shooting at imaginary game, besides remarking and behaving in a very singular manner. His body was found to be covered with a net-work of twine, evidently an insane idea. His behavior at the fire was so singular as to attract considerable attention. His wife was a sober, industrious woman, and had just returned from a day's washing, by which she contributed to the support of the family. She was attended by Drs. Barnet, Dunnell and Chase. Amputation was performed successfully by Drs. Coles, assisted by Drs. Armor, Bevemeyer, and Wm. Ward, and it is thought she will recover.

COAL.

LEHIGH COAL AT ELIZABETHPORT, NEW-JERSEY.—A direct railroad communication has recently been opened from the Lehigh coal region, to the waters of New-York Bay at Elizabethport, New-Jersey. This is the nearest approach which has yet been made by railroad from the coal deposits of Pennsylvania to the great markets of New-York and New-England. Formerly, and before the present inland routes were opened, the dealers in this City obtained their Lehigh coal from Bristol, Pennsylvania, at a distance of more than 200 miles, and at a freight of about $2 60 per ton. Now, it can be had by an inland water communication of 12 miles, and at a freight of about 75 cents per ton. The same relative advantage will also be derived by all the buyers on the North River and in the vicinity of New-York, and in all the New-England States. During the present season the subscribers will be the exclusive shippers of the celebrated South and West Spring Mountain Lehigh Coal, at Elizabethport, and vessels will now be able, at all times, to obtain cargoes without delay. Orders of loaded cars with freshly mined coal are now received daily, direct from the mines. Considering the lateness of the season, it is very important that orders for this celebrated coal, to be promptly executed, should be sent without delay to our agents at New-York, Philadelphia, or Boston.

A bill was presented, being the Sheriff's account for transporting convicts. It related to the removal of "one convict six miles, at 25 cents per mile, and one day's maintenance," $7.50. At first it a form of certificate for the signature of the Warden that such prisoner has been received; but such certificate remained blank, and after discussion, the whole matter was referred to the Committee on City Prisons for further examination.

Several reports of Committees were presented, being relative to matters of no public interest.

Governor Olyphant, with whom was associated Governor Osborn, presented a report and resolution in reference to boarding physicians, thus:

"Resolved, That the compensation allowed for boarding physicians practicing under this Board be at the rate of $150 per annum."

Governor Olyphant presented a minority report, he thinking that twenty dollars per month be allowed for the boarding of the assistant physicians, until the Board shall consider a less sum sufficient to board them in a respectable manner."

Governor Olyphant said these gentlemen were acquainted with the expenses that would fall them for private practice, and in view of the great advantages they were enjoying, he thought they ought to pay for their own board. He did not think the charge would bear out such expenditure.

Governor Tremain said the $150 was not all. The house, the furniture, coal, and lights were provided.

The majority report was sustained by two and opposed by three Governors.

On the question of the adoption of the majority report, the President spoke at some length. Afterwards, Governor Townsend observed that this was not a medical school. Dr. Sanger, who was present, had stated, yesterday, said that in some European hospitals one-fifth of the assistants had to pay for permission to be there; others were paid for their services.

Governor Tremain said, it had been contended this was not a school. That the assistants were required to be, or were, all of them, graduates, and yet Dr. Francis and other high authorities had pointed out the importance of a hospital school for those who, in time, may learn.

It was stated that the report be referred back to the Committee, to ascertain what is the rule in other hospitals and in similar institutions. Agreed to.

Governor Bunn then submitted the following resolution, which was seconded by Governor Olyphant:

"That, in the opinion of the Board, the practice of giving entertainments at the various institutions, for purposes other than the meetings of the Board for public business, is inconsistent with the proper appropriation of moneys collected for charitable uses."

Thus, the Board, after an entertainment for other than those engaged in the administration of the affairs of the Department, be paid for by the Department.

Governor Olyphant spoke strongly in favor of this resolution; so also did Governor Bunn. The latter declared he had no wish to direct his resolution personally at Governor Olyphant. Governor Olyphant, he said, was a person he had brought to the island who had not gone away with the idea that every expenditure was economically conducted. He ever, it was a policy, small business, and the man who would offer such a resolution would be sacked. He (Mr. Bunn) could vote for it; it was certainly time for it, as you already done the wine, brandy, cigars, and such things. Governor Townsend said the resolution was narrow-minded; it was a slap at Mayor Wood, who was going out of office were anxious to find votes against the resolution. Governor Olyphant moved the reporters and the papers would, unless he had brought up this resolution that the expenses and friends of the Board and Common Council, as visitors, were to receive not the slightest hospitality.

Governor Tremain asked if a Governor came up on business on Sunday, and brought with him two or three friends, was he or was he not at liberty to request the City to give them a hospitable dinner? Certainly, the subject was surrounded by difficulties. The Board had not Governors would abuse the privilege of entertaining his personal friends. For his part, he did not think twenty or thirty persons had any right to ask him, as an individual Governor, to take them to the island and entertain them. There ought to be some fixed rule. There ought to be no personal feeling in the matter.

Governor Olyphant reiterated. There had been some unkindness among the Governors.

Governor Townsend indignantly asked the meaning of such insinuations, and repelled the charge of unkindness.

Governor Harris said, this small resolution was an attempt to monopolize. For himself, he never came on Sundays, and never came with troops of friends. He should support the resolution truly, but it would be ironically—those who were going out, and who had been, perhaps enough, were attempting to coerce their successors. The people were tired to sustain such forms of economy; he wished to economize, but he did not approve of road beef for the Governors and soup for those who paid for it.

Ultimately the resolution was laid on the table.

Nothing else came up of any special importance. Adjourned.

Commissioners of Health.

The Board of Health Commissioners met yesterday at the Mayor's Office. A number of cases were acted on. The following were reported:

Brig Friesic, from Havana, arrived on the 20th, and being been ventilated, is allowed to proceed to the City.

Bark William Henry, from Cadenas, arrived yesterday, detained at Quarantine for examination—to be allowed to come to the City at the discretion of the Health Officer.

Brig Adelo, from Trinidad, arrived Monday—is to lay over till to-day for further examination.

Fire in Forty-fifth-street—Nearly $100,000 Worth of Property Destroyed.

The fire that broke out, about 5 o'clock Monday afternoon, in Forty-fifth street, was the largest ever known in the Nineteenth Ward. The loss by it is estimated at nearly $100,000. It commenced in the rear factory of ABAM MILLER, on Forty-fifth-street, between the First and Second avenues, and is supposed to have originated from the bursting of a keg, which was undergoing the process of tarring. The tar by some means caught fire while the workmen were pouring it into the keg, and the flame so intensely communicated with the building, from which they spread to the following adjoining houses:

The Turtle Bay Brewery, owned and occupied by Mr. FRANCIS BOSSERT; the brewery of Mr. CHARLES OTTERSON; and the dwelling-house of AMBROSE SNOWDEN, WILLIAM HAVES, LEONARD HOVER, GEORGE [illegible], VALENTINE BENNER, and Mr. WANSBROUGH.

These buildings were entirely consumed, notwithstanding the prompt and energetic efforts of the firemen. The last named their labor very severe, and, owing to the long absence of rain, the flames spread with great rapidity.

The loss occasioned by the fire will not vary much from the following statement:

Brewery Bossert, loss $50,000; insured for $5,000.

Adam Miller, loss $10,000; no insurance.

Otterson, loss $10,000; no insurance.

Wilkins Hayes, loss, a three-story frame house, $6,000; insured for $4,000 at Ins. Co. of Penn.

Leonard Hover, loss, a two-story frame house, $3,000; insured at Ins. Co. of Penn. for same.

Charles Benner, loss, a two-story frame house, $3,000; insured at Ins. Co. of Penn. for same.

Valentine Benner, loss a three-story frame house, $7,000; insured in the Broadway Insurance Co. for $1,000.

Mr. Wansbrough, loss, a three-story frame house, $4,000. Mr. W. is absent in the country, and nothing is known of his insurance.

The citizens of the West arrested several men for stealing property while the fire was in progress. They were committed yesterday morning, at the Police Station, Forty-first street, by Justice ROGERS, for examination. Their names are Armstrong, Robert and John Conner, Riley, and Gallagher.

☞ The Young Men's Fremont and Dayton Central Union held their weekly meeting last night, at the Stuyvesant Institute.—F. B. MARSHALL in the chair. Mr. ANDREW, Dr. HOUSE and Mr. GREENLEAF made addresses. Mr. GREENLEAF directed his observations particularly to refutation of personal attacks on public men for political purposes; such attacks always result in favor of those they are directed against. Several songs were sung, and the meeting adjourned until next Saturday, three cheers being first given for FREMONT and DAYTON.

Fluctuations of the Heated Term.

The heated term, embracing the great heat of Thursday and Friday of last week, the maximum temperatures of which were 90° on Thursday and 90° on Friday, embraced within it singular phenomena.

Between 11 A. M. and 12 M., of Tuesday, 15th, the inhabitants of Leicester Centre were startled by an explosion in the air like the report of cannon, and so severe that the concussion was sensibly felt.

At Richmond, Virginia, a little before 9 P. M. of Wednesday, the 16th, the shock of an earthquake was felt.

On Thursday, 17th, about 7 P. M., a beautiful meteor was seen from Charleston, S. C., expanding into a ball of fire of beautifully variegated colors, leaving a smoky decay atmosphere in its path.

On Saturday, after the heat abated, a swift and very thirsty wind prevailed from southwest, west and northwest. E. MERIAM.

The Naked Bathing Nuisance.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, July 22, 1856.

In your paper of this morning I see an article about public bathing in broad day. I have long been wishing that some one would call attention to the matter. In the Eleventh Ward the Police rarely interfere with the boys for breaking this ordinance. At many of the wharves in this Ward there are vessels where the officers have their wives living on board with them, and, of course, they have more or less occasion to be on the deck of their vessels, or on the dock. They have a perfect right to be there; and, if the Police Captain of this Ward paid more attention to his out-door work, would not be obliged to see large numbers of boys in a state of nudity. On Sundays the Police are particularly inattentive to their duty. A visit to the piers at the foot of Fifth, Seventh and Eighth streets will satisfy any one of the truth of the above D. D. M. S.

The Mayoralty.

NEW-YORK, Sunday, July 20, 1856.

Stephen H. Branch, Esq.:

DEAR SIR—The citizens of New-York have elected several Mayors for the purpose of turning out GEORGE W. MATSELL. Although these Mayors pledged themselves, before their election, to turn him out, yet they have retained him in office ever since the Police Department was established, about twelve years since. Most of these Mayors Mr. MATSELL has controlled, and to some of them he has been a perfect dictator. Now, Sir, I desire you to inform me in a letter (which I intend to publish,) what will be your course towards Mr. MATSELL in case you are elected Mayor in the coming Autumn, and what are your views respecting a reformation of the Police Department, which, as at present conducted, is a great curse, to our City. Having tried you, and not found you wanting, and being determined to support no person for Mayor hereafter, unless he has my highest confidence, like yourself, I have taken this early method to elicit your views on this important subject. Respectfully, JOHN H. BRIGGS,

Alderman Thirteenth Ward.

The following is Mr. BRANCH's explicit reply:

NEW-YORK, Monday, July 21, 1856.

Alderman John H. Briggs:

DEAR SIR: If elected Mayor, I shall, as Police Commissioner, do my utmost to remove Mr. MATSELL, on the ground that he is a subject of Queen VICTORIA. He officially declared to the Board of Aldermen that he was a native of the United States, which I have proved to be a falsehood, by the Brandon records, and through the purest living testimony of both hemispheres. And I will prove, on the very day of my inauguration, that his father was never naturalized. His Marine-Court naturalization records are a twelfth hour fraud, as I have already proved, and will re-prove at his new trial, if I am elected Mayor, when I will give him a kick potent enough to send him all the way back to Brandon, England, his native country. I am an American, and, so help me God, no British alien shall rule me, if I have the power to prevent it. Kindly thanking you for your flattering testimonial of me, I remain, sincerely, your friend. STEPHEN H. BRANCH.

That Flag.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

In your editorial notice of the large FREMONT and DAYTON Banner recently put up in Broadway, you erroneously state that it was replaced at Academy Hall.

It was donated upon its restitution to the Republican General Committee by them to the Young Men's Fremont and Dayton Central Union, who have had it suspended from their Head-Quarters, Stuyvesant Institute, No. 659 Broadway.

☞ Mr. CHARLES MILLER, attached to the Department of Streets and Lamps and a widely known citizen, died suddenly on Monday, at his residence, No. 1,095 Broadway. His age was 36 years. He leaves behind a wife and one child.

CHICAGO, July 8, 1856.

J. C. MOORE—Dear Sir: Did you ever stand and watch a fire brick when it was surrounded by fire? If you did you know in just what shape LILLIE's Safes stand. They are perfect bricks. Just as good as new after the fire, and so are its contents. We had a very severe test of one here yesterday afternoon. A fire broke out on State street and destroyed $60,000 worth of property. The safe was in the bottom of it, yet it delivered up its contents, this morning, uninjured. Respectfully yours,

B. P. PRATT.

LONG ISLAND.

Republicans in Brooklyn.

An adjourned meeting of the Republicans of the First and Third Wards, Brooklyn, was held last evening in Museum Hall, at the corner of Orange and Fulton streets, Brooklyn. There was a respectable attendance of persons interested in the cause, mostly old Whigs and old-line Democrats, some of whose names will be recognized in the list of officers elected, as being in former times leaders in their old, but now almost defunct parties.

The Committee, appointed at a former meeting, to select candidates for the various offices, reported the following names, which were received and adopted unanimously:

For President—S. M. PARSONS.

For Vice Presidents—First Ward—Luther Ames, Hobart Ford. Third Ward—A. P. Stanton, Dr. Griffin.

Secretary—George H. Beiss.

Assistant Secretary—Joseph Woodbridge.

Corresponding Secretary—Charles Whittlesy.

Executive Committee—First Ward—James Humphrey, James Freeland, William Barton, Alonzo H. Gale, G. C. Gardiner, Judge C. H. Bramhall. Third Ward—A. Fitzgerald, R. D. Benedict, Jesse C. Smith, Robin Sanford, Joseph Kidley, Luther B. Wyman.

The Committee appointed for that purpose reported a Constitution and By-Laws, which were accepted and adopted. Another Committee appointed to secure a place of meeting reported in favor of securing Museum Hall, and were authorized by the meeting to rent the room proposed until the election of JOHN C. FREMONT to the Presidency.

Addresses upon topics suitable to the occasion were made by the President, S. M. PARSONS, Judge BRAMHALL, J. E. WOODBRIDGE, Mr. COGGS, Col. CHARLES J. JACK and others. After the speaking quite a number signed the Constitution and By-Laws, and with three cheers for the Republican nominees and three more for the "First and Third Ward Republican Association," the meeting adjourned for one week.

Brooklyn Taxes.

The Joint Board of Aldermen and Supervisors of the City of Brooklyn, to fix the amount of taxes to be levied for general and special purposes, to meet the expenses of the City for the year 1857, concluded their labors on Monday night last. The principal appropriations made we have before published, and now give some additional items of interest.

TRUANT CHILDREN.—Under the act passed in 1853, giving incorporated towns authority to levy a tax for the purpose of providing for the care of children who have no friends to care for them, or whose parents neglect to do so, an appropriation of $10,000 was made. Mayor HALL and a few others have endeavored from the first to carry this law into effect, but have heretofore failed. The amount appropriated is small, but it is considered sufficient to make a commencement, particularly as a building belonging to the county—the old Lunatic Asylum—is unoccupied, and can be obtained at a little or no expense for the purpose of making a beginning.

TELEGRAPH.—The appropriation is also made to extend the Police Telegraph through all parts of the City where it is not now laid, and also to connect with the office of the Chief of Police.

POLICE.—The appropriation for the Police Department is some $70,000 less than last year. The Common Council will find it necessary to reduce the Police force, or else reduce the pay on the 1st of January next.

EDUCATION.—The Board of Education asked for $116,000, but the Committee of the Joint Board reported in favor of allowing only $100,000. It appears that the Board of Education reserve their interest money as an insurance fund—or, in other words, are their own insurers, and by so doing save about $1,400 per annum. Many members of the Joint Board contended that the Board of Education had no right to create such fund, which amounts now to some $9,000. After considerable discussion, pending which several motions were voted down to increase the amount, the report of the Committee in favor of $100,000 was adopted. The whole sum to be levied is about $70,000 less than for the year 1856.

☞ The Brooklyn Common Council has adjourned until Sept. 22.

A Noble Boy.

On Monday evening a boy named ARTHUR JOHNSON fell into the East River, and would have been drowned but for the prompt action of another lad named WILLIAM GARNER, of Brooklyn, who jumped in and brought the drowning lad safely to the shore.

Fatal Accident.

On Monday evening a boy seven years of age, named JAMES MCGINNIS, whose parents reside on Sands street, was run over by one of the Flushing-avenue cars at the corner of Sands-street and Hudson-avenue, Brooklyn, by which he had both legs broken and was otherwise seriously injured. The boy was taken to the City Hospital by the Second District Police, where he lingered in great agony until yesterday morning, when he died.

Coroner RANKING held an inquest yesterday, when a verdict was rendered exonerating the conductor of the car from all blame.

The Late Fluid Accident.

MARY HERBERT, at No. 69 Prospect-street, Brooklyn, who was so severely hurt a few days since by the explosion of a fluid lamp, was yesterday taken to City Hospital for treatment. She is not expected to recover.

Two Men Drowned.

As the Enoch Dean was leaving her dock, opposite the Fulton Market, New-York, yesterday morning, a sloop was attached to her stern to be towed into the stream, and when the lines were cast off the sloop, being under considerable headway, ran into a row-boat containing three men. The boat was sunk and two of the men were drowned. The third man was saved by a boat from shore.

St. James School, Brooklyn.

The fourth annual Exhibition of this School will take place this evening, at the Brooklyn Museum.

Fire in Brooklyn.

At 2 o'clock, yesterday afternoon, a stable at the foot of South Ninth-street, owned by W. A. KIOSS & Co., was damaged by fire to the extent of $1,000.

The Heat.

Several persons were prostrated by the heat and liquor-drinking yesterday, in Brooklyn, but no case resulted fatally.

☞ At the election for Delegates to the Soft-Shell Syracuse State Convention, held in the Third Assembly District, Kings County, Mr. WM. MANNIN was elected Delegate, and Mr. MORRIS GANYT Alternate, by a large majority.

NEW-JERSEY.

☞ The Buchanan and Breckinridge Club of Jersey City met at their headquarters on Monday evening. Arrangements were made to open a reading-room at their headquarters. A mass meeting will be held on Thursday evening.

A Den of Young Thieves.

The arrest of an orphan boy named Wm. McDonald, yesterday, in Jersey City, on a charge of stealing, brought to light the fact that there exists an organized gang of youthful thieves, who had a den in a lumber-yard on North Point, where they slept during the early part of the day. Towards night they sallied out in search of plunder.

Railroad Accident.

A German, poorly dressed, and apparently about 40 years of age, was killed yesterday afternoon, at 5 o'clock, by being run over by a train while walking upon the track of the New Jersey Railroad, and his conduct justifies the opinion that he designed to commit suicide.

Organization of a Hose Company at Hoboken.

The Hoboken Council have authorized the organization of a Hose Company in that city, to be called "Ocean Hose Company No. 1."

TUESDAY, July 22—P. M.

There was a further decline of an eighth ₱ cent. in Foreign Exchange to-day, and altogether a tame business for the Cunard packet sailing direct to-morrow. The range of Sterling, first class bills, is 109¾@110 ₱ cent., Francs 5.17½@5.15. The engagements of Gold for this opportunity will not vary essentially from the estimate of yesterday, about $800,000, over one-half the amount, being in California bars. This falling off from the large movement by the last Cunarder from this port direct, has very much diminished the concern felt in the Street in regard to Specie shipments; particularly so as the Bank reserve is more favorable than anticipated and the California packet of the 5th July will be due early next week. The light business doing on the Stock Exchange adds to the ease of Money subject to temporary loan. The addition made to the Bank line last week was mainly on short mercantile paper, the Dry Goods Importing and Sugar trade being the principal borrowers. The last require a large amount of means, at present high prices, to carry over their stocks to the Fall business. To-day the general market for Money is quiet and rates favorable.

The Board report of the sales of Stocks and Bonds is again remarkably limited. The rates paid are ½@¾ ₱ cent. higher than on Monday, and while speculation is apparently inactive, a strong purpose is evinced by holders to await better prices, particularly for the dividend paying shares and such of the Railway Bonds as enjoy the advantage of a European market. The demand for Reading and New-York Central shares, both on the eve of a 4 ₱ cent. half yearly dividend, has somewhat improved, and orders appeared for the former this forenoon from Philadelphia. The stock closed 82¾@82⅞. It is understood the transfers for the August dividend will close on Saturday next, to reopen the first week in August, when the dividend will be paid in cash. Illinois Central Bonds closed 92¾ sales, and Erie shares, after being done as high as 63¼@63½, in the Street, closed at Second Board 62½. The sale by auction of the City and County Bonds, advertised by Mr. DRAPER, was fairly attended. The leading buyer of the City 6s was the Commissioner of the Sinking Fund from St. Louis, who paid 81@78¾@77½@77 for about $100,000. The closing lots were done at 75¾@75. Nearly all the County Sixes were withdrawn; $20,000 sold at 75 ₱ cent.

The Custom Duties have fallen off considerably this week. The payments into the Sub-Treasury, to-day, were $136,314. The office disbursed $97,361 on Treasury account, and $25,262 on the checks of other Government officers. The regular balance this afternoon is $7,644,079.

The Greenwich Fire Insurance Company have made a half yearly dividend of 10 ₱ cent., and the Leather Manufacturers' Bank a half yearly dividend of 5 ₱ cent.; both payable on or after first August.

The transfers of the New-York Central Stock will close for the August dividend on 31st July, to reopen on 23d August. The dividend of 4 ₱ cent. is payable on 20th August.

The shares of the new La Crosse and Milwaukee Railroad have been registered on the official list of the New-York Stock Exchange, and are now regularly called at the Board. The first price made was 70 ₱ cent. The present quotation is 71@72 ₱ cent. The traffic of the Road is rapidly increasing, and its prospects ahead represented by its friends in Wisconsin as quite encouraging.

The City Bank lines of Loans and Specie in the official weekly statement published this morning stand:

|---|---|
| Per Loans and Discounts | $110,673,454 |
| Specie reserve | 15,396,181 |
| Together | $126,069,635 |

The bases for these investments very nearly correspond with the above, viz.:

| | |
|---|---|
| Capital Stock of City Banks | $52,170,817 |
| Undrawn Deposits, July 21 | 73,144,569 |
| Together | $126,314,386 |

As remarked in our last paper, the undrawn Deposits are now larger than ever before known, and, from inquiries to-day, we are satisfied they are still on the increase, and not likely to run down materially before the 1st of September. The increase is particularly marked in that class of country bank balances, from the interior of New-York, upon which their redeeming agents or correspondents, the Metropolitan and American Exchange Banks, allow a moderate interest. While the Specie reserve is sustained at from twelve and a half to fifteen millions dollars, the probability is, these deposits will be employed in temporary loans and short-date discounts, and whatever may be thought of the policy of further expansion, the business public need not be taken by surprise if the line should continue to go up in proportion to the aggregate capital and deposits subject to use. When it reached the maximum in the Spring of $107,940,435, April 12, the

| | |
|---|---|
| Capital of the Banks stood (about) | $52,000,000 |
| Deposits unknown or free of Clearances | 69,500,734 |
| Together | $121,500,734 |
| Loans and Discounts $107,940,435 | |
| Specie reserve 13,558,664 | $121,499,099 |

From this point there was a gradual curtailment for six weeks, until the line of Loans and Discounts was reduced to $102,207,767, May 24, the undrawn Deposits being also reduced from $69,500,734 to $63,874,195. Both items then turned upward, and in seven weeks attained the figures in the statement of this morning, the highest for both items and unknown. Together yet unknown, though on the highest, it may be safely assumed, which they will attain, before the setting in of the active Fall business.

It may be remembered that the item of Loans does not include all the investments bearing interest or paying an income to the Banks. They have invested a large sum in State Stocks in the Bank Department at Albany, represented, in active business, by their circulation and a further investment in Real Estate, such as banking lots and houses, and on bond and mortgage, which items may be said to be represented in the general movement by the surplus or undivided profits of the Banks.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, July 22, 1856.

To several days of activity in the Stock Market during the beginning of the week has succeeded a dullness not unusual at this season of the year. Prices have experienced oscillations upon most of the more active stocks, which have resulted generally in a decline, as is shown by annexed table of daily closing prices. The aggregate transactions of the week were considerable, embracing at well some of the State Stocks, as the bonds and shares of the best accredited railways. Besides this, the bonds of several of the Western roads which, for a long time, had remained entirely dormant, seem disposed to emerge from their protracted inaction. Money, although in rather better demand from the importing merchants, remains easy to procure, the Banks appearing disposed to lend freely the balances from the interior, which are again on the increase with them. State Stocks.—There were large transactions in Virginia and Missouri 6s, at a decline of ⅝ to ¾; Indiana 5s have been freely done without alteration of price. City and County Bonds.—Prices are well sustained, but we have merely to mention some retail transactions in St. Louis 6s, Milwaukee 7s, and Albany 6s. To-day an auction sale of $188,000 St. Louis 6s, from 81 to 75¾ and interest, averaging 76 4-5, and of $10,000 St. Louis County 6s, at 75 and interest rather reduce our quotations. Railroad Bonds.—Large transactions have taken place in Erie 7s, 1871, at steady prices, and in Illinois Central Construction at a decline of ¾. There has been a fair demand for New-York Central 6s and 7s, at a trifling advance; the new 7s of this Company, redeemable in 1876, and to the redemption of which an annual sinking-fund of 3 ₱ cent. is provided, are now in the market. At private sale, transactions have taken place in Ohio and Pennsylvania Income, in Lake Erie, Wabash and St. Louis 1st mortgage, and in Cleveland and Pittsburg 1st mortgage on branches. They are quoted at an advance. Michigan Central 8s, 1860, have been done freely and are looking up. Railroad Shares.—The activity which prevailed during the earlier part of the week turned mostlyon Erie, Reading, New-York Central, Cleveland and Toledo, and Michigan Southern. The last named are quoted ex dividend. The decline on these has been general. Illinois Central, with very little doing, declined 2 ₱ cent. Exchanges on Europe rather flat. [Translated Extract.]

Several weeks of great activity and buoyancy have been followed by one of reaction. The heavy exportation of Specie to Europe, and the continued system of expansions by our Banks, have caused some fears that the present ease in money matters might be disturbed before long. The business in speculative Stocks has not been very large throughout the week, and prices show a decline without exceptions; Investment Stocks have been tolerably active, but prices have been more or less influenced by the general tone of the market. The orders for our Stocks from Europe, by the last mail, have been less important than by the last two or three steamers. The principal orders having been for Michigan Central Bonds, Illinois Central Bonds, Cleveland and Pittsburg second Mortgage, and Ohio and Pennsylvania Income Bonds; there were also some purchases of other Western Railroad Bonds made for foreign account, but only in limited amounts. State Stocks.—
